

Hunt Party Fails To Bag Wolves

PLANO, Tex. (AP)—Mr. Wolf outfoxed the hunters yesterday. They went after him 2 1/2 hours in a search plotted and staged with military precision. They shot up the countryside.

The bag: two foxes, two owls, a squirrel and a dozen rabbits. No wolves.

Timber wolves have been killing sheep around Plano, 18 miles northeast of Dallas. A half dozen farmers have lost 10 to 25 head the past year and a half. The hunters, mostly from Dallas, heard about it and organized an assault.

The day broke chill and cloudy, and they assembled at the Miller & Son feed store here. Many crossed the street to Murrell's Hardware to buy shotgun shells. Roy Murrell came down to open up for the event.

In the feed store, farmers John Merriman and Dexter Prince studied a penciled map of the area and plotted strategy. "We'll cross Albritton's Bottom, then go up here," Prince suggested. Outside, he told the milling hunters, "One last statement—you are going at your own risk."

A couple of miles north of town, the hunters lined up in a large open field and, at a rifle shot signal, started off through oaks, elms and hackberries in a long, straggling file. The hunt took up most of the morning.

They saw lots of critters. A cottontail leaped into view and, as guns blasted, zig-zagged off in terror. This one escaped. Moments later, however, the only woman along—Mrs. Joseph App, of Dallas—shot a rabbit. Reed Hoover shot both owls.

Several said they got shots at wolves. None was successful.

Decomposed Body Dug Up By Police

THE DALLES (AP)—A decomposed body was removed from a shallow grave Sunday after police had been led to the spot by Robert C. Knowles, who last month told California authorities he had strangled a man to death.

The corpse, believed to be that of Albert Stuart, 58, a Wickenburg, Ariz., harvest worker, was buried near Shaniko, 60 miles southeast of this north Central Oregon town.

Knowles, 47, Bangor, Me., watched unemotionally as Dr. Homer Harris of the state police crime laboratory directed removal of bones from the frozen earth. Knowles, who had said he killed Stuart in October, 1933, took police to the grave Saturday night. Bones of the dead man's toes protruded from the ground.

He was not permitted to talk to reporters Sunday but Sgt. Wayne Gurdane of the Oregon State Police, said Knowles when asked about a motive, gave no other reason than that he "was angry."

Knowing the body cleared up a 14-month-old mystery of Stuart's disappearance. He was known to have left Modesto, Calif., in October, 1933, with Knowles in Stuart's car and trailer.

Later the trailer was found buried at nearby Mosier, Ore. Meanwhile, a man who said his name was Stuart was arrested in Stuart's car on a drunk driving charge at Red Bluff, Calif.

He was released before Oregon authorities could question him. Knowles said he went to San Francisco and later to Florida where he was arrested on the car theft charge and returned to Sacramento Monday under orders of the federal court there.
