

Former Hoover Commission Member Reports To Rotary

That the controversial Hoover Commission report on hydroelectric power should have gone farther is the opinion of Robert Sawyer of Bend, one of the members of the commission's task force on water resources and power.

Sawyer, ex-publisher of the Bend Bulletin newspaper, spoke to Rotary members at a luncheon meeting Friday noon at the Willard Hotel.

He said that he was in agreement with the recommendations of the commission as far as they went, but that they didn't go far enough.

The commission recently had recommended, in effect, that wherever possible the government get out of the power business and leave it to local initiative to take over.

The report drew considerable fire from public power advocates, who felt that such a program would be a "sell-out" to private interests.

Sawyer joined the task force when it was formed in November of 1953. Its work was completed last May 31 after many meetings and public hearings. Adm. Ben Morrill, USN, who was in charge of the Seabees during World War II, was chairman of the group.

Sawyer said that he made eight trips to Washington during the course of his work with the task force. The ex-publisher is well acquainted with water resources and power in the Northwest, and is a past president of the National Reclamation Association.

He explained the accomplishments of the commission, which was first organized in 1949, and again in 1953. The first commission dealt with proposed improvements in government administration, while the second concerned itself with policy.

"The commission made 350 recommendations in this time," he revealed, "and 160 of these were administrative and need no action of Congress. According to the best estimates they should save from $3.4 billion, and thus allow for a comparable reduction in taxes."

He told the Rotary members of the report on the Rural Electrification Administration, which recommended that it be put on a business, self-sustaining basis.

"I believe that in the beginning it (REA) was desirable and important," he said. "The power companies were falling down on the job. They were too cautious about extending lines into the country, but they are able to do the job now."

Sawyer stoutly defended Ex-President Herbert Hoover, who led the commission. He read from a newspaper story in which Hoover was criticized as coming out of retirement to serve the vested interests.

Sawyer said that anyone who thought this to be true was not a good American.

Farmers Awed By High Pay

LONDON (UP)—American farmers touring Russia are "astounded" at the high wages paid Russian combine operators but "critical" of their combines, Radio Moscow said today.

The broadcast said the U. S. group visited the Avov machine and tractor station and the Stalin collective farm near Rostov on the Don River.

"The delegates were astonished to learn that the combine operators at Avov earn as much as $600 to $700 rubles in cash and up to 250-300 rods of wheat at harvest time," Moscow Radio said.

Six thousand rubles is $1500 at the official rate of exchange but actually is much less in real buying power. A pod is slightly more than 36 pounds.

The broadcast said that "when viewing the Stalin collective farm the guests expressed various criticisms and one was surprised that grain should have to be cleaned twice."

Moscow quoted the American as telling the director of the Ros-Sal-Mash works that the works are "still producing machines that are not completely effective. We don't clean grain once it has been harvested by a combine."

Moscow said the delegation left last night for Stalingrad by way of the Volga-Don Canal.

Maverick Calf Marks Start For Klamath Basin Rancher

By RUTH KING

A maverick Hereford calf found in 1903 by a farm boy with an eye on the future started the fender, George Hagelstein, Klamath County rancher on the way to a trip to Europe which materialized this year when Mr. and Mrs. Hagelstein spent several weeks in Germany and other points on the continent.

Hagelstein's parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Hagelstein, brought young George from his native birthplace, Germany, to this country when he was three months old. That was in 1893. The family moved to Klamath County soon after arriving and settled on land in the Algoma area which still is farmed by the sons.

Hagelstein, who now owns one of the finest ranches in this region and is rated as one of the outstanding Hereford men in this country, was among the farm boys hired by stockmen at the turn of the century to throw rocks off the dirt road after cattle had been driven through to market in Klamath Falls from the range lands farther north.

One day young Hagelstein, then 10 years old, found a lost calf and sought out the owner, a man named Straw whose first name or initials have been forgotten. Straw gave the youngster the few-days-old heifer for some rock clearing the boy had done and George was in the cattle business.

Lugging the calf home he dreamed even then of what money from his prize would do. It was from this animal, plus industry and wise planning, that Hagelstein has built his present successful livestock business.

Many thousands of head of cattle have been run on the Hagelstein acres since the boy grew up. Hagelstein keeps a yearly herd of some 500 cows and heifers which stemmed from that first calf.

He lives on the land bought by his parents and has added several additional hundreds of acres. The only farming activities on the big ranch operated jointly with his brother, John Hagelstein, are connected directly with the cattle enterprise.

A third brother William G. Hagelstein, president of the Butte-Valley State Bank, Dorris, He owns a 500 acre ranch adjacent to his brothers.

George Hagelstein is a member of the Oregon Cattlemen's Association served for many years as a 4-H Club leader, has been a member of the Klamath County Farm Bureau, of the Klamath County School Board and of the board of school district No. 2 (Klamath Union High School) and is presently a member of the Klamath County Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. and Mrs. Hagelstein have two daughters, Mrs. Glen (Dorothy) Buchanan, Algoma, and Ruth Hagelstein, physical education instructor in Sherwood, Oregon schools.

Although there are no more rocks to throw from modern highways because cattle ride to market in style in trucks, George Hagelstein remembers the thrill that he got in ownership of that first white faced Hereford and a fine calf from his herd frequently finds its way into the care of a 4-H boy or girl.

School Shop Bid Awarded

The contract to build a new shop for Merrill High School has been awarded to Pinniger & Watkins, 1430 Klamath Avenue, Carrol B. Howe, superintendent of Klamath County schools, announced today.

The bid, which included several alternates, amounted to $15,270. Other bidders were W. G. Wieggle and Bill Wales Jr., both of Klamath Falls.

The 40x80-foot building will house the shop at Merrill High School. The course is instructed by Kelly Robinson.

The structure will have 14-foot walls, steel construction, and will be furnished through Heaton Steel & Supply Company, the contractor stated. Insulation will be aluminum coat fiber glass. Foundation and four-inch floors will be reinforced concrete. It will have a roll-up door and 30 windows.

Completion date for the building is early September.

Sportsmen Oppose Siskiyou Doe Plan

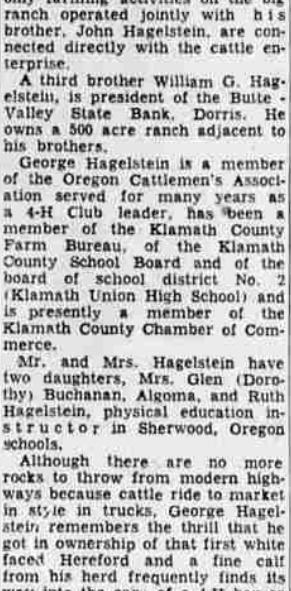

YREKA — Four sportsmen's clubs reported they oppose a proposal for a special open season on does in Siskiyou County.

The reports were received at last week's meeting of the Siskiyou County board of supervisors. Farmers in the county had asked for the hunt to cut down crop depredations.

The board has delayed action until the county fish and game commission makes its recommendation.

The hunt must be approved by the state fish and game department.

THE CAMERA CORNER

By Bud Buesing

Whether you're taking a picture of a national monument you see on your vacation or a shot of your baby playing in your yard, you have to be aware of the light and how to use it. When you take your first picture someone probably told you to take pictures always with the light coming over your shoulder. Perhaps you thought that was to keep light from shining directly on the lens. That's one reason... but there's another: the need for effective shadows on the picture subject.

In black-and-white photography, shadowing is a vital factor. That's why high noon is not the best time to take pictures. When the sun is directly overhead, all the subjects tend to appear flat. There are no shadows to mould and model forms and shapes.

In the morning or afternoon you get slanting light from the sun, creating shadows that play against the light. In your pictures these shadow areas give sharpness and definition to the composition. Watch the sun on buildings, for instance. See how the small architectural details are brought out by the shadow patterns. While the eye doesn't see it as obviously, the same is true of people's faces. So watch those lights and shadows!

Flat Finishes For Exteriors

Homeowners who want a flat finish for house exteriors now can have a choice of 77 colors ranging from deep tones to bright pastels, the Martin-Senour paint company has announced.

Originally developed for use on exterior rough lumber, shakes and wood shingles, the new paint, after extensive field and laboratory tests, proved equally well suited for providing a flat finish on wood siding.

To expand the decorating possibilities for flat finishes, the company matched 75 colors of its new paint line with its masonry line.

The co-ordinated color program enables homemakers to make their homes look larger by matching foundations, chimneys and retaining walls with the body of the house. Trim and accent colors, formerly confined to wood surfaces, now can be extended to masonry areas.

The flat finish is recommended for the informal ranch-type home, particularly when used in combination with rough natural wood or stone.

Another feature of the new paint is that it provides a low luster, slow chalking finish. It is resistant to mildew, fungus and extremes of weather.
