

4-H Group Tours Basin

A group of 50 Marion County 4-H students and adults, headed by Ann Bergholz, Salem, county extension agent in 4-H work and Ben Newell, Marion County extension agent, are making a three-day tour, today, Tuesday, and Wednesday, to a number of Klamath County farms. The visitors are being accompanied by Ray Peterson, assistant Klamath County agricultural agent.

Today the itinerary calls for stops at Tulana Farms on the Upper Marsh for a study of land reclamation; at the Henry Wolff ranch near Chiloquin to study silage making and at several ranches in the Wood River area to look over pastures and to observe management practices.

Tuesday the visitors will see the Weyerhaeuser Mill and hardwood plant, will visit the Holiday ranch operated by Howard and Lee Holiday, will lunch at Moore Park and see the seed production operations on the E. A. Geary ranch.

Wednesday the visitors will head south, stopping at the Earl Mack ranch to study flock improvement, will observe potato cellar construction, as well as clover seed production. 4-H cattle feeding methods, will look over registered Hereford's at the Lawrence Horton ranch in Poe Valley and the dairy herd at the Stanley C. Masten ranch in Poe Valley.
