

McCloud Lumberjack Festival Replete With Pretty Girls, Clowns, Parades

THE McCLOUD LUMBERJACK FIESTA last weekend attracted tourists from throughout the West Coast, and it's easy to understand why. In addition to numerous contests, the affair included two parades, pretty girls, clowns, and an aquacade last Sunday night. The two-day event was sponsored by the McCloud Recreational Council. Herald and News Photographer Don Kettler caught the flavor of the fiesta in this series of pictures. The smiling royalty at left, top, is Pat Herron. She rode in the parade Sunday, led by the American Legion drill team of McCloud Post 92, top right. Little Laura Colomba of San Francisco, center, was more absorbed with her cotton candy than with the parade floats, such as the Pocahontas

Lodge float, left center. Riding in it were Helen Jordan and Dorothy Klingingsmith. The girls on the left, center, seemed deeply interested in what was going by even if Laura wasn't. A parade wouldn't be a parade without a clown, and this one was no exception. Charles Belmont, lower left, provided the laughs on this occasion, and Ray Davis seems amused by his antics. The two youngsters at the bottom, center, provided their own conveyance for the parade. They are Donald Ricconini and Rosana Malatesta. Fred Stratton and Ralph Jackson, both of Weed, bottom right, engaged in some horseplay for the benefit of the photographer. That isn't blood you see on the blade of the knife wielded by Jackson.
