Scientists Study Sex Experiments

By ALTON L. BLAKESLEE, AP Science Reporter. EAST LANSING, Mich. (AP)—Consider a world without men, where women are father and mother of children.

This is theoretically possible—though most unlikely—based on experiments with a frog world where females have been eliminated. The males produce all the young tadpoles. This womanless world of frogs and conceivably manless world of human beings was described today to the American Institute of Biological Sciences by Dr. Emil Witachi and Dr. C. Y. Chang of State University of Iowa.

They experimented with a common type of frog, often used in pregnancy tests. They treated male embryos (still unborn) frogs with a female sex hormone. The males all became egg-producing females but were still genetically males.

When the eggs from these sex-reversed frogs are fertilized by sperm from their brothers, or from other male frogs, all the young tadpoles are male constitutions. But any desired percentage of them can be induced to become "females" by adding a tiny amount of the female sex hormone to the water in which they live. One week of hormone treatment produces the change of apparent sex, for a lifetime.

At this point, for procreation of the colony of frogs, the true genetic females are no longer necessary. Theoretically it might become possible to do this same thing with animals or conceivably with humans, said Witachi and Chang. A more likely possibility is pre-determination of sex at will in stock animals, to be sure of producing male or female offspring.

If human sex were tampered with like the frogs were, the human male might become unnecessary. If human embryos could be treated normally as were the frogs, only girls would be produced.

Some of them might also be induced to have some male characteristics, to contribute the male share of fertilization, but they would not be changed into men, males. No true males would be necessary.
