

FIRST OTI GIRL STUDENT FROM HAWAII, Hamby Akina, center of Kihel, Maui, Hawaii, was greeted on her arrival in Klamath Falls Thursday by Betty Gore, dean of women, and R. L. Smith, dean of men. Hamby is the first girl student from Hawaii to attend Oregon Tech. The school has had several men students from the islands. Hamby, a graduate of St. Anthony Girls School, Wailuku, Maui, has enrolled in the practical nursing course at OTI. She flew from her home to the mainland and was very enthusiastic about the opportunities offered by the school and the Klamath Basin. —Photo by Floyd

Hells or Hell's, The Whole Dam Looms As One Big Fight

By SAM DAY
BOISE, Idaho —The nation's dam-building program is also its most controversial. There's even disagreement on how to spell its name.

Many believe "Hell's Canyon" was once correct but has lost its spot in popular usage. This has happened to Harpers Ferry, W.Va., and many other towns.

"We always spell it Hell's Canyon," says Sam Fretwell of Parma, Idaho. He's chairman of the Idaho-Oregon Association Hell's Canyon Area, a group that wants to see a federal dam constructed in the Deep Snake River gorge bordering Idaho and Oregon.

But Gilbert Stanton, public relations director for Idaho Power Co., says, "It's Hell's Canyon as far as we're concerned."

The utility and Fretwell's group have been fighting for months over more than just the use of an apostrophe.

The Federal Power Commission last Aug. 4 licensed Idaho Power to build three private dams in the canyon area.

The dams would flood the site of the proposed federal dam. Public power forces have fought the utility's plan through more than a year of FPC hearings. They threaten to take it to court unless the FPC changes its mind.

The canyon dips more than 2,000 feet below the peaks of the Wallowa Mountains of Oregon and the Seven Devils Range of Idaho, on opposite sides of the mighty Columbia River tributary.

It's usually spelled Hell's Canyon by both the FPC and the U.S. Interior Department.

It occurs both ways in the Reader's Guide to Periodical Literature and in brochures of the Chamber of Commerce in Weiser, Idaho, the city nearest the canyon.

Early travelers who looked with awe on the jagged cliffs and treacherous, rapids-strewn river probably gave the gorge its name.

Sister N. Alfred Elsensohn, historian at St. Gertrude's convent in Cottonwood, Idaho, writes of a man named Haller who tried to navigate the canyon in 1891 but cracked up on the rocks.

"From a profane expression used in Haller's later recountal of these difficulties," she writes, "Hell's Canyon derived its name."
