KF Chamber Directors Hear River Commission Report

Nelson Reed, chairman of the Oregon Klamath River Commission, reported on three phases of the commission's study of use of the river water to the Klamath County Chamber of Commerce directors at their regular meeting Wednesday noon in the Winema Hotel. The Klamath River commissions of Oregon and California met September 27 and 28 in Sacramento to discuss the proposed contract between the California Oregon Power Company and the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation. They will meet again in Klamath Falls on October 12. At the Sacramento meeting John C. Boyle, vice president and general manager of Copco, read a letter stating that if pending opposition was withdrawn Copco would agree that no Klamath River water would be used by them when it might be needed for domestic, municipal or irrigation purposes. This decision paralleled a provision which the two commissions had asked Copco and the USBR to insert in the contract. This contract, as amended, would insure the protection of future use of the river's water for both private and federal irrigation projects, Reed stated. Reed also stated, that he believed the commission would agree to the contract at the coming Klamath Falls meetings. He said that surveys indicate that there is, and will be in the future, enough water in the lake for the future irrigation and power needs of this area. In discussing the proposed interstate compact for the river water's use, which the commissions have been studying for the past several years, Reed said that the two groups have almost agreed to an equitable use of the water between the two states. This compact, which is entirely separate from the contract between the USBR and Copco, is for the joint use of the river's water between the two states for irrigation and other purposes. The compact must be ratified by the two states' legislatures and then forwarded to the U.S. Congress for final approval. It is proposed by the river groups to treat the Klamath Basin as an entirety regardless of state boundaries. This plan would allow for 200,000 acres of irrigated land in Oregon and 100,000 in California for present and future needs. If this plan is adopted the Oregon side of the river would probably be followed by the United States. In his third point Reed said that the differences over the costs of the algae study of Upper Klamath Lake will undoubtedly be decided in the near future between the joint commissions. In further business the chamber directors heard a report from Director Jim Kerns on the county Grassman of the Year contest. Kerns said that the winner will be picked from three entrants all of whom are selected by the three soil conservation districts in the county. Those competing will be Lloyd Giff, Langell Valley soil district, Ira Orem, Poe Valley district and John Hooper, Klamath district. The winner of the county title will compete for the state Grassman title sponsored by the Portland Chamber of Commerce. The winner will be picked by judges Rex High, Herb Pollard and Alvin Cheyne with Roy Peterson of the county agent's office as secretary. Director Bob Henry announced that a forum on sanitation with Max Braden, Klamath County sanitarian and Ted Gerow, state sanitarian in attendance and Floyd Wynne as moderator, has been tentatively set for the first Wednesday in November. Chamber President Deb Addison announced that the directors' nominating committee will be named next Wednesday. The committee will give its report on the following Wednesday with the election of new directors scheduled for the second Wednesday in November.
