Satellite Life Told Scientists

WASHINGTON (AP)—A leading rocket expert has calculated that a basketball-sized space satellite at an altitude of 100 miles would last less than an hour. At 200 miles it could last about 15 days, and at 300 miles for about a year. Dr. Homer Newell told the national capital section of the American Rocket Society last night. Newell is acting superintendent of the Atmosphere and Astral Physics Division of the Naval Research Laboratory. He based his calculations on a satellite about the size, shape and weight of a basketball, traveling at a speed of 18,000 miles an hour. That is the expected speed of the satellite which the United States hopes to send aloft by 1957. The Defense Department, announcing two contracts awarded yesterday, said the size, shape and shape of the satellite itself have not yet been determined, and added that it will probably travel in an elliptical orbit, varying its height above the earth. As it slows down, gravity is expected to pull it into denser atmosphere where it will disintegrate. Newell said the U.S. Committee for the International Geophysical Year, of which he is a member, is thinking in terms of launching 8 to 10 space satellites during that year, actually, an 18-month period from July 1957 through December 1958.

Yreka Terminates Water Rationing

YREKA (UP)—The Yreka City Council ended three months of water rationing today and praised the people of the area for cooperating during a period of "critical" water shortage. The council voted unanimously last night to end the rationing that went into effect July 15, but urged the citizens to use as little water as possible until the rainy season arrives. The rationing was begun when water levels in the city's reservoirs reached dangerously low levels. During part of the rationing, the people were restricted to three two-hour periods weekly for watering lawns and gardens.

Britain Plans Subsidy Cuts

LONDON (AP)—Prime Minister Eden's government is preparing Britons for another dose of anti-inflation medicine to reduce their record standard of living. Cabinet ministers hint the government intends to cut subsidies on housing and reduce spending on roads and perhaps schools. British newspapers predict higher taxes. New measures to be announced after Parliament reconvenes Oct. 25 will seek to curb a buying spree so more goods become available for export. The government also is considering economies in defense spending, but the United States has been assured Britain will stick to military commitments. The chancellor exchequer, Richard A. Butler, this week gave a hint of what is ahead. He promised

"to blow the froth off the brimful economy." He spoke just after announcement of a drain during September in Britain's gold and dollar reserves now at their lowest in 2 1/2 years.
