

PROPOSED PROJECT — KLAMATH FALLS, OREGON

SOUTH 6TH ST. VIADUCT OVER S.P. TRACKS

OREGON STATE HIGHWAY COMMISSION
R.H. BALDOCK — HIGHWAY ENGINEER

NO HUNTER SHOULD MISTAKE the stately whistling swan (left) and the common snow goose shown here, but last year there was a known kill of 53 of the big swans in the Basin area. Hunters are warned this year to take extra precautions against shooting at the swans that inhabit the water areas of the Basin.

The swan, it will be noted, has black feet and bill, while the snow goose has very plainly marked black edges on the wings. The swan will average better than 20 pounds as compared to the snow goose's five. (Story on page One.)

A SWAN IN FLIGHT is a beautiful sight as he soars high over the marshes and grasslands of the Basin, his high, flutelike call carrying for miles as he sweeps by overhead. Hunters are again cautioned to take an extra look before shooting to make sure they are not mistaking this big, majestic bird for the smaller snow goose which is legal fare for the scattergunner. The swan is marked not only by his great size but by black feet and bill and the absence of the black wing tips of the snow goose. This bird was snapped in flight over the Red Rock area in Montana. The big birds use almost all water areas of the Basin at this time of year.

THIS ARTIST'S CONCEPTION of the proposed new Sixth Street viaduct over the Southern Pacific tracks was released by the State Highway Department. According to R. H. Baldock, bids will be advertised for the November meeting of the Oregon Highway Commission, providing arrangements for the location of the overpass can be completed with the Southern Pacific. Plans for the viaduct have been completed. Joe Toole, resident engineer for the department in Klamath Falls said that traffic will use the old viaduct during most of the construction time, as the new one is located a short distance south of the old one. However, during the final stages of construction, it might be necessary to detour traffic for a short time, he said. He added that if the contract is let at the November 2 meeting of the commission, the viaduct should be completed some time next fall. The sketch shows how traffic will be routed in the vicinity of Sixth and Broad, Market and Spring streets. Sixth street will be widened slightly as far as Commercial street, where traffic headed toward town will be rerouted to Seventh Street will be widened slightly as far as Commercial Street, Commercial to the downtown area. In the area of the off and on ramps at Sixth and Broad, present plans call for landscaping, which serves the dual purpose of beautifying the area and preventing erosion on the built up fill. There will be little change at the Adams Street end of the Viaduct, except for some channelization of traffic. Total cost of the project is estimated by Toole in the vicinity of three quarters of a million dollars, who said that an original estimate of $645,000 has become out of date due to increased costs and additions to the project. The four-lane bridge will be built of concrete reinforced by steel girders, while the approach ramps will be on fill.
