French-German Crisis In Saar Question Poised As Europeanization Plan Out

By GODFREY ANDERSON
 SAARBRUECKEN, Saar (AP)—A new French-German crisis stirred today in the wake of the Saarlanders' 2-1 rejection of the plan to Europeanize their rich industrial territory.

The outcome of the plebiscite toppled the Saar's pro-French Premier and heightened German demands for return of the coal and steel valley they held before World War II.

A whopping 96.72 per cent of all eligible Saarlanders went to the polls yesterday and turned down the European status plan 423,434 (67.7 per cent) to 201,973 (32.3 per cent).

There were no incidents during the balloting after a turbulent three-month campaign. The borders of the tiny area between France and Germany were sealed to prevent possible infiltration by agitators. A five-nation neutral commission supervised the voting. Within minutes after the final returns were reported early today, Premier Johannes Hoffmann announced he was resigning "out of respect for the will of the people."

He promised immediate parliamentary elections certain to set up a new government pledged to work for speedy reunion of the Saar with Germany.

Hoffmann said he would serve until a new parliament is elected but pro-German leaders met this morning and said they would not accept him as a caretaker head of government. Instead they proposed Heinrich Welsch, chairman of the executive board of the Saar railroads.

Hoffmann, 64, has been in power since 1947.

By defeating the Europeanization statute—which had taken five years to work out in Paris and Bonn—the Saarlanders inflicted a bitter humiliation on the French and raised a grim question mark over French-German relations.

The Europeanization plan would have put the Saar's defense and foreign relations under a neutral commissioner of the seven-nation Western European Union while maintaining its customs and currency union with France. The statute was signed by West German Chancellor Konrad Adenauer in Paris a year ago as the price for French agreement to West German rearmament.

The 961-square-mile territory, occupied by France after World War II, now is linked in an economic union with France and the French control its foreign relations and defense.

France previously has said rejection of the Europeanization plan would maintain the present alignment, but a French spokesman conceded today that new negotiations with West Germany on the Saar might now be necessary.

"We are first of all democrats and we have to abide by the will of the majority," one Paris official said.

Leaders of all political parties in Bonn—except the ailing Adenauer, who had backed the agreement to the hill-balled the result of the plebiscite as a "vote for Germany." They left no doubt they expect the French to hand over the territory eventually.

In their lavishly financed blitz campaign, the Saar's three pro-German parties made four chief demands:

1. The right to Saar self-determination in full democratic freedom;
2. Political unification with Germany;
3. An end to the present (French) orientation of the Saar's economy;
4. Rejection of the present Saar regime.

The pro-Germans appealed today to the "French people and the peoples of the Western world to understand the Saar people and to respect their decision."

Urging that the Saar be consulted on any discussions on its future, they asserted their victory really was a step forward on the road to European unity and was not directed against France.

Heinrich Schneider, chairman of the Democratic party and a former Nazi, and the heads of the two other pro-German parties put in an appearance before hundreds of newsmen as the results were announced.

"We won for Germany," Schneider declared. "The Saar has recognized it is a part of Germany. This must be considered in any coming solution of the Saar question."

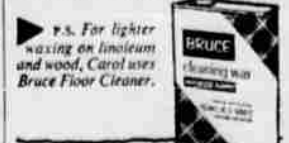

The Saar was taken from Germany at the end of World War I and placed under a League of Nations trusteeship. In 1935 more than 90 per cent of the Saarlanders voted to join Hitler's Reich.

France's desire to control the Saar's economy stems from its close proximity to the vast iron deposits of French Lorraine. By controlling the mills which process that iron, the French can keep close to a steel equality with Germany.

"Clever gal, my Carol!"

I'm tickled pink with the smart way my Carol handles her housework. Take wood floors for instance. Most gals complain about all that scrubbing and waxing. But not my Carol! She cleans and waxes them in one easy operation with Bruce Cleaning Wax. It takes her half the time and a lot less elbow grease. And we've yet to have a guest who hasn't commented on our beautiful wood floors. My Carol and her Bruce Cleaning Wax really make easy work of a hard job. I'm mighty pleased with both of them.
