Farm Bureau Talks Drive

LANGELL VALLEY - A membership drive was discussed at the regular monthly meeting of the Langell Valley Farm Bureau held at the community hall last Tuesday evening. The group also decided to sponsor an advertising campaign and considered the suggestion that cartoon advertisement be used.
Chairman Arthur Monroe called for a report from Walter Smith Jr. on the last county farm bureau meeting.
Members voted to seek no change in the present freight rate bill and to accept the bill for uniform traffic laws and highway approaches. They also decided to go along with the state farm bureau on land ownership by the state game commission, state taxation, log hauling, education and standard time.
The resolution on vehicle and gas tax was voted down as was the proposal on county taxation, especially the part taxing farmers on all livestock held for sale and for produce held in storage after January 1.
Refreshments were served at the conclusion of the meeting.

Sisters Man Is Speaker

W. P. Edwards, superintendent-principal of Sisters School, Sisters, Oregon, spoke to the Gilchrist High School students October 25 on wildlife wealth, the problems of conserving it, and the attitudes people should take toward conservation.
Edwards spoke of the wealth wildlife contributes to our country by providing the sport of fishing and hunting, the privilege of studying animals in their natural habitats and the value of wildlife in dollars.
Problems mentioned by Edwards that are causing a decline in our wildlife population were the draining of swamplands, pollution of streams and lakes, overhunting, diseases and the clearing of land for man's use.
Edwards stressed the idea that every individual should have the attitude that wildlife belongs to everyone and because it does, we are obligated to protect it by obeying the laws that have been made for this purpose. By acquiring these attitudes and having a better understanding of the problems, efficient conservation programs will be carried out in the future.

Private Flying Gets Okay

Klamath Falls municipal airport manager Eric Majors today said that as planned now private flying from the airport will not be curtailed when the U.S. Air Force takes over the base for its jet fighter operations some time next year.
Private fliers will have to conform to control by the airport tower, which will be operated by the Civil Aeronautics Administration personnel, Majors said.
The city will continue to operate the steel hangar for private flying and the old wooden hangar will be moved from its present location to a spot on the ramp just north of the steel hangar.
Majors said the airport is used at present by about 70 private planes.
The airport is administered by Majors under the direction of Mayor Paul Landry and the airport committee of the city council consisting of councilmen Lawrence Slater, Walter Fleet and James Barnes.

New S-P device cushions contact

Shippers love a gentle touch. But gentle as we try to be, we're always looking for better ways to do the job. That's why we asked Stanford Research Institute to help us develop an experimental "hydraulic draft gear" for freight cars.
Basically, it's a device that lets the whole body of the car slide up to as much as ten inches on its chassis. The action is cushioned hydraulically, somewhat like that of the familiar door-closers you find in office buildings. The harder the impact, when cars come together, the greater the cushioning effect. It's being tried out now. We are hopeful that it may become an important means of further reducing the risk of damage to fragile shipments.
In any event, it's another example of how Southern Pacific, working with independent research organizations, constantly seeks new and better ways to provide the West and Southwest we serve with the finest railroad service.
