

CHOOSING a pet parakeet is fun. The pet little birds come in such a variety of colors that you can literally purchase a pet to match your color scheme. The ancestor of the present domesticated birds, the wild shell parakeet of Australia, is a small bird with green and yellow plumage. Now parakeets come in three basic color groups—green, blue and yellow.

IT HASN'T BEEN PROVEN that parakeets can read, but one of the best ways to get back a lost bird is through advertising, according to French's Pet Bird Institute at Rochester, New York.

PARAKEETS

Coloring has nothing to do with the ability of a parakeet to learn, it has been decided by French's Pet Bird Institute. So you can choose the coloring you wish. The parakeet's markings may be either black, gray or cinnamon. In addition, there are pied or harlequins which are normal-colored parakeets with patches of white or yellow. There are also rare albino birds, white with pink eyes and lutines which are usually clear yellow with red eyes.

The important things to look for in choosing your new pet are personality and good health. Select a bird that seems to be lively, cheerful and bright.

A healthy, happy bird will soon become a delightful pet and you'll find that his decorative value is only a small part of his appeal for you.

Hundreds of parakeets are reported lost every year. Usually an unscreened window or an open door is the escape route and oc-asionally a bird will ride out doors unnoticed on its owner's head or shoulders.

If your pet decides on a trip into the outside world, don't feel that he is necessarily gone forever. A great many people get their pets back again.

One of the best methods of retrieving your bird is by placing an advertisement in the local paper. These ads are amazingly effective. Most tame birds, when they become tired, swoop down on the first friendly head or shoulder they see. The adopted owner usually takes the bird home and either puts an ad in the paper himself or starts reading the lost columns for a clue to the home of the bird.

Several birds have talked themselves back home because their owners taught them to repeat their own name, address, or phone number. As a precaution, why not make this information one of the first lessons you teach your bird?

Dunsmuir Legion Fetes Veterans Day

DUNSMUIR — More than 75 members of Epps Post, American Legion, the auxiliary and their families gathered at the Legion Club Room Thursday to celebrate Veterans Day.

A turkey dinner was served and the evening concluded with songs and visiting.

Mrs. R. M. Capovilla was dinner hostess, assisted by Mrs. F. T. King, Mrs. M. Johnson, Mrs. Abe Martin and other members of the auxiliary.
