California Weather:

SAN FRANCISCO (UP)—California weather summary: Rain spread to the Tehachapis late Sunday and Sunday night and was still falling in the Bakersfield-Santa Maria area this morning. The northern portion of the state was clearing this morning. The extreme south was cloudy but no precipitation had fallen up to 6 a.m.

For the 24-hour period ending at 4:30 a.m., Mt. Shasta had received 1.89 inch, Red Bluff .66, San Francisco airport .28, Fresno .11, and Santa Maria .08. Additional snow fell over the mountains of the northern and central portion at elevations above 4000 feet. Temperatures in the extreme northern part of the state were 11 degrees warmer than on the previous morning.

Minimum temperatures ranged from 41 to 57 except mountain areas above 4000 feet were generally below freezing in the northern and central portion of the state. El Centro had 54, Sacramento 45, Red Bluff 43, Eureka 41, Salinas 1, San Diego 57.

Winds on the northern and central coast have generally shifted to the west and northwest and are 12-25 mph, the southern coast had variable winds gentle to moderate. Most sections will be clearing during the day and fair weather will be general on Tuesday.

Seven Inches Of Snow Here

Five inches of very wet snow were recorded by the GAA at the airport during the 24-hour period that ended at 8 a.m. today, bringing the official total on the ground to seven inches.

Four inches of new snow were reported last night on the Willamette Pass. There are 29 inches of roadside snow. Bend-Portland Truck Service drivers arriving this morning said they experienced no difficulty but advised motorists to carry chains.

It was overcast over the Greensprings this morning, according to the local office of Triple A. One inch of new snow had fallen during the night.

Two inches of new snow fell on the highway to Lakeview, but the highway is passable without chains. Highway 97 south is reported slick. The Herald and News reporter at Weed reported that chains are required four miles north of Weed on both 97 and 99. The California highway patrol stated there are 16 inches of snow on the ground over Mt. Hebron at Williams Service Station and Grass Lake. Chains were required this morning between Weed and Dunsmuir.

Weed got its first big snowstorm Sunday evening when the wind abated and the rain turned to heavy snow which fell until about midnight, bringing five inches of wet snow. The sun was shining this morning and the thermometer stood at 28 degrees at 6 a.m.

47 SURVIVE CRASH—Firemen and rescue workers carry a body from wreckage of a DC-4 that crashed on takeoff from Boeing Field at Seattle. The plane, on Government contract, had 74 persons aboard, including 66 soldiers returning home from the Orient. It crashed into a house setting it afire but a woman and five children in the house escaped. Forty-seven persons aboard the plane escaped but 27 others were killed in the crash.

Cave-In Kills Copper Miner

RUTH, Nev. (UP)—One workman was buried alive Saturday and two others escaped death by inches when an estimated two million tons of rock and earth caved in at the huge Liberty copper pit, one of the largest in the world. Coroner Paul Norris identified the dead workman as Neves Reyes, 22, Kimberley.

Reyes was working with two other men with a compressor truck and a churn drill when the avalanche of copper ore thundered down from the top of the north-west corner of the vast pit. The latter is 600 feet deep, a mile long and three-fourths of a mile wide. It was operated by the Kennecott Copper Corp.

With Reyes were William Kaamase and L. J. White, both 24. All three fled for their lives but Reyes stumbled and as he crawled to his feet again he was buried beneath tons of dirt.

White and Kaamase were treated for shock and minor injuries by a physician. The compressor truck and churn drill were buried by the cave-in which also ripped out railroad tracks leading to the surface on three levels.

Evidence In Blast Told

DENVER (UP)—A Denver electric shop owner revealed today that John Gilbert Graham, 23, the accused airliner bomb plotter, worked for him six days last month to learn about electricity. Graham confessed to the FBI, but later denied that he placed a dynamite bomb in his mother's luggage before she boarded the United Air Lines DC8B in Denver. Graham is charged with the first-degree murder of his mother, Mrs. Daisy King, 54, who was killed with 43 others in the explosion aboard the Portland-bound plane on Nov. 1. The Rocky Mountain News, in a copyright story, said today that Damon Ward, owner of an electric shop in Denver, hired Graham Oct. 10. Ward said Graham wanted the job for some "needed" (electrical) experience. Graham worked six days and never came back.
