THE CAMERA CORNER

BY BUD BUESING

Here's a set of suggested New Year's resolutions that any camera owner could add to his list . . .

Resolve to take proper care of your equipment. Make sure especially that your camera is clean. Get the dust out by blowing out the interior each time you insert a new roll of film.

Clean the lens in front and rear, with a cotton swab saturated with lens cleaner. Polish the lens very lightly with lens tissue. And then be sure to keep your camera in its case, and all your equipment in your gadget bag, ready to use.

Resolve . . . to be sure you're "ready to shoot" when a picture-taking opportunity arises. Keep plenty of film on hand and have the camera "loaded." Resolve to be sure you get the right film for your purpose . . . and not to just buy "a roll of film." Don't forget to check up on the possibilities of some of the newer, faster films, too. (We'll be glad to help you pick the right film, if you're a new camera owner . . . or an old hand who isn't sure.)

Resolve . . . to make good use of those photographic accessories you got for Christmas that tripod, flash attachment, or exposure meter.

Resolve . . . above all, that 1956 is going to be the year you really get that camera to use . . . our 1956 album of pictures we are one you're proud to show and happy to thumb through. Come in this week for your supply of film . . . and start shooting!

For Your Convenience, We Will Be Open Sun. and Mon.

HAPPY NEW YEAR TO ALL

FAMILY ALBUM

BY LYLE DOWNING
GEORGE P. DAVIS

Now . . . Then . . .

A backward glance down the dim corridors of time reveals that 1928 was a big year for the United States.

The battleship Maine was blown up in Havana Harbor. Greater New York was established by legislative act.

The Western Labor Union was organized at Denver, Colorado.

"When Knighthood Was in Flower" was a best seller novel.

And George P. Davis was born April 3, 1898 in Billings, Montana.

Sixteen years later hardly anyone who observed young Davis driving an old-fashioned horse-drawn sprinker wagon through the streets of Laurel, a railroad town 15 miles west of Billings, would have picked him as a good bet to top the ladder of success.

HEADS TRUCK LINE

Davis, now president of the Pierce Freight Lines of Portland, United Development Corporation, Medford, and field adviser for the Small Business Administration, looks back with nostalgic pleasure on his early years in Montana. He says he agrees with the Victor Herbert operetta claim that "of all the many lands you will have journeyed through, you'll recall the best of all—the land your childhood knew."

Although he spent the long days of summer swimming and fishing in the storied Yellowstone River which flows near Laurel, Davis had his mind on more serious enterprises. A lot has been said about scholars "burning the midnight oil." Davis didn't go in for that—call the best of all—the dawn's early light.

Davis obtained the major part of his education from a correspondence school. That basic education was sound enough so that many years later he was able to qualify as an instructor for the University of Oregon Extension Service.

LEARNED BY MAIL

"I have the highest regard for America's correspondence schools," he said. "Those institutions have provided many young men and women with a fine education, which otherwise would not have been available to them."

"When he was 28 years old, Davis went to work as a salesman for the Alexander Hamilton Institute. He sold business and executive training courses all over Montana.

In 1925, Davis moved from Montana to Fresno, California. A little of the railroad life in Laurel must have rubbed off on him. His first job in Fresno as agent-at-large for the Santa Fe Railway. When the Shasta Route was opened through Klamath Falls in 1927, Davis was loaned to the Southern Pacific Company by the Santa Fe. He came to Klamath Falls and helped set up a mainline accounting system for the Southern Pacific.

RAIL AGENT

In 1929, Davis became agent for the Oregon, California and Eastern Railroad which still operates between Klamath Falls and Bly.

"That was a real railroad in those days," he said. "The cattle and logging industries were booming. We also hauled lots of merchandise."

In 1929, Davis joined Lorenz Company, one of the Northwest's leading wholesale hardware firms. He quickly rose to general manager of the Klamath Falls firm. He resigned that position in 1933.

In retrospect, Davis attributes his success to "singleness of purpose."

"It wasn't until I left Lorenz

Farm Mishaps To Be Told

Farm accidents, their causes and costs, will be reported next year in three Oregon counties. The governor's committee on farm safety at a recent Corvallis meeting decided to sponsor the study in an effort to reduce farm accidents.

A survey started this year in Linn County will be continued and reporting will begin in two other counties, not yet chosen. Members of the Oregon Farm Bureau and State Grange have offered to assist in the survey, according to Committee Secretary Mrs. Mabel Mack, assistant director of extension service at Oregon State College.

Local safety chairmen will chart nature and causes of home, shop, fire and highway mishaps. The Linn County survey was arranged through a county agricultural planning committee at the request of local farmers alarmed at the rising farm accident rate. Committee Chairman Al Bauer, Salem, said farming is now rated as the third most dangerous industry.

Maynard Coe, farm safety director, national safety council, Chicago, told the group that five states have such accident reporting systems and that one of the five, New Hampshire, reduced its accident rate 75 per cent last year.

A tractor driving demonstration at state fair next year was proposed by the committee to educate farm families on safe handling of agriculture's No. 1 hazard. The proposal was prompted by a highly successful tractor demonstration in Lane County last summer, first of its kind in Oregon, Bauer stated.

Increased use of reflective tape on vehicles, clothing and road crossings will be promoted next year, Walter Schroeder, Coos County extension agent in 4-H work; Ron Pitman, Albany FFA member, and Burton Hutton, State leader, 4-H work, OSC, will plan a program of distribution and use.
