J. Kerns Wins Sales Contest

James W. Kerns, manager of the firm of J. W. Kerns, Ore., Ltd., 734 South Sixth Street, today was declared a winner of a nationwide sales contest sponsored by the Capehart-Parnsworth Company of Fort Wayne, Indiana.

Mr. and Mrs. Kerns will be a part of a group of 275 Capehart distributors and dealers who will sail on January 13 on the steamship Ocean Monarch for a nine-day cruise of the West Indies with stops at Nassau, B.W.I. and Kingston, Jamaica.

The group will gather at the Commodore Hotel in New York on Thursday January 12, for a pre-sailing cocktail party and will be guests of honor for dinner at New York's Latin Quarter.

The J. W. Kerns firm has been handling the Capehart line of television during the past year and Mr. Kerns selection for this trip was based on the sales made in this area during that time. Scheduled for introduction on the trip will be six new television receivers as well as a preview of several new fidelity models to be produced during the second quarter.

Accompanying the group will be L. G. Haggerty, president; Paul Hartman, vice president-in-charge; William Young, general sales manager; Joseph Conway, chief engineer, and other Capehart sales personnel. Mr. and Mrs. Kerns are to leave Klamath Falls by air on January 11.

Potato Growers Elect New Officers For Coming Year

The election of new officers and the filling of three vacancies on the board of directors caused by expiring terms was the major topic of a meeting of the Klamath Potato Growers Association held yesterday at the Merrill recreation hall.

The officers, elected to the board, are Bob Petrik of Merrill, president, and Vern Haskins of Poe Valley, vice president. County agent Wall Jendrzewski will continue as secretary of the association. The new directors are Haskins, Bill Cheyne of Henley and Frank Payor Jr. of Malin. Holdover directors are Fred Mueller of Bonanza, retiring president, and Paul Fairclo of Klamath Falls.

Louie Lyon of Malin was re-elected as delegate to the National Potato Council. Lyon and Troy Qualls of Merrill were re-elected as delegates to the Klamath-Deschutes Potato Promotion Council, which is conducting an advertising campaign for Oregon potatoes.

CORRECTION

The name of John Holzgang, who has been secretary of the Klamath Falls Kiwanis Club for the last seven years was omitted in the caption beneath the picture of the incoming president, in the January 9 issue of the Herald and News. Credit for his office went to Bert C. Thomas who has been treasurer for many years.

The growers also voted to send a member of the group to San Francisco to study the effectiveness of the advertising campaign, which is promoting the "Oregon Russet" rather than either "Klamath" or "Deschutes" potatoes. They took this action after Lyon reported that several San Francisco wholesalers protested that they had calls for "Klamath" rather than "Oregon" potatoes, and that their customers would not accept "Oregon" potatoes.

The man to go to San Francisco will be appointed by the new president.

The group also decided to invite the Deschutes growers to send a representative to participate in the survey.

Ben Davidson, administrator of the Oregon Potato Commission, said that the decision to advertise "Oregon" potatoes rather than carry out separate campaigns for "Klamath" and "Deschutes" potatoes was based primarily on a saving in costs. He said that the campaign was proving successful in the Portland area, where sales of Idaho potatoes had been cut down in favor of Oregon products.

The growers also heard several reports on research being carried on at Oregon State College. Roy Young, plant pathologist, discussed the use of Vapan, an experimental fungicide developed by the Stauffer Chemical Company, in test plantings at the Clarence Hill ranch in Henley.

He also reported on antibiotics, and said that some chemicals were getting so specialized that they would kill organisms without killing others which would tend to balance the organism killed. This, he said, allowed the organism not affected to develop freely and, perhaps, to seriously damage the tuber or plant.

Jack Ross, farm crops specialist, described experiments being conducted by Dr. Arsenia Mackay of the home economics department on the relative cooking qualities of potatoes grown in different areas. He said that no conclusions had been drawn from the experiments as yet.

He also described the method of testing seed potatoes at the greenhouses at OSC.

Bryant Williams, chairman of the Oregon Potato Committee, and Merrill Webb, manager of the committee, reported on its activities during the past year.

Williams said that the increase of marketing agreement fees this year was intended to build up a rotating fund so that individual commitments would not have to go into debt to finance committee operations.

He said that the fees probably would be lowered next year. He explained that the banks would not loan money to the committee as a group because of its impermanent nature.

Webb said that the Department of Agriculture had rejected a request to continue the 50 cent diversion payments beyond the deadline of December 31. Payments dropped after that date.

He said that the department had adopted the plan to promote early diversion of the otherwise marketable potatoes, and that they felt the continuation of the high payments would prevent achievement of this objective.

Other reports were made by Gene Ross and Don Black of the local experiment station. Ross reported on test plantings of various new strains of barley.
