

Lonely Little Girl Feted By Rail Freight Crewmen

By RAYMOND F. WATERS
Hobbs Daily News-Sun
HOBBS, N. M. (AP) — When the mellow tones of the air horn on a diesel engine sounded before the Texas-New Mexico Railway freight train reached a small house four miles south of Hobbs, it was the beginning of a thrilling experience for a lonely little girl.

The horn was a familiar signal for her to run to the door and wave at the crew. The tiny, frail 4-year-old girl with the blonde hair stepped out on the front porch and waved as the train approached. This time, instead of rumbling right on through, the train slowed up. Then when the engine drew even with her house, the brakes went on with a squeal.

It was wonderful but somewhat frightening to Michalene Winkle. The little girl lives in one of the few houses near the tracks in the 16-mile stretch between Hobbs and Eunice. She has been waving at the train crews for more than a year now and trainmen have grown to watch for her and wave back.

The engineers blow the whistle as the trains approach. She's there as the southbound train passes in the middle of the day. The northbound comes by at night, but time makes no difference—she's always there, with the porch light turned on.

When the southbound stopped the other day, the conductor, the engineer, the firemen and two brakemen climbed down and walked to where she stood.

"Come here, honey," said L. C. Casey, the conductor.

She came forward a little hesitantly.

The conductor leaned down, stuck out a big hand and said: "My name's Casey and I'm an Irishman."

She gravely placed her hand in his.

The trainmen carried Michalene over to where the big engine rested with its motors idling. They put her down and then she saw the packages they had taken from the engine cab. One of them contained a big, beautiful doll almost as large as she was. The others were big boxes of candy, apples and nuts. Gifts from the trainmen, the card with them read:

"To the little girl beside the railroad from the Texas-New Mexico train crews."

Ike's Budget Outline Given

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Eisenhower sent his first balanced budget to Congress today. It calls for spending $65,865,000,000 in the year beginning July 1, an increase of more than 1 1/2 billion dollars over this year, mainly for defense.

A predicted increase of $1,800,000,000 in revenues, to a total of $66,300,000,000, foreshadowed a surplus of 433 million dollars in fiscal 1957.

The President asked Congress to forego a tax cut unless the cut would not interfere with small debt reductions planned in the new budget.

He also predicted the government would wind up the current fiscal year 200 million dollars in the black. He said spending of $64,270,000,000 will be more than balanced with revenues of $64,500,000,000.

He predicted a debt of $274,300,000,000 on June 30, 1960, and of $273,800,000,000 a year later.

He asked for new appropriations amounting to $66,291,000,000 — almost equal to predicted revenues, and 326 millions higher than planned spending.
