THE CAMERA CORNER

By Bud Boesing

Our rather technical discussion in last week's column about depth of focus had only one aim . . . to show you that good focus on your principal subject is important. With the main subject in the plane of focus, he (or it) will appear as sharp as the lens can reproduce . . . which is pretty sharp.

The fact that foreground and background subjects might be slightly blurred is not important. It even helps to focus the print viewer's eyes on the principal picture subject. Notice how, in the photographs used for advertisements, the bottle or cloth or what-have-you being sold is sharply in focus. The background is often deliberately left out of the plane of focus. The viewer is aware of it as background . . . but it never interferes with the main subject of the ad.

In taking group pictures, however, with people at various distances from the camera, you'll have to decrease your lens aperture to increase the depth of focus. You want the whole group to photograph sharply. In landscape and scenic shots, you'll have to decrease that aperture even more to get overall sharpness through greater depth of focus.

Depth of focus charts are available at a very low price. Come in and we'll show you how to use them. We have everything in fine cameras and accessories at

Know Your Air Force

MASTER SERGEANT ALVIN G. HUDSON

(Editor's note: This is one of a series of articles designed to acquaint the readers of the Herald and News with the officers and airmen of the U.S. Air Force manning the Klamath Falls jet interceptor base.)

By MAX WAUCHOPE

"The new jet U.S. Air Force has come a long way since I first flew in a 90-mile-an-hour open cockpit Martin B-1 bomber," said Master Sergeant Alvin G. Hudson who has been stationed at the Klamath Falls Air Force Base since last fall.

The veteran non-commissioned officer, who has served 21 years with the old U.S. Army Air Corps, the U.S. Army Air Force and the present U.S. Air Force, served under many of the great names of the Air Force after his first enlistment in 1929.

After joining the service Sgt. Hudson (he left his home in Medford and enlisted in Southern California) spent two years in Hawaii in old Luke Field. (This field was later turned over to the Navy and the designation was moved to the present Luke Field in Arizona.) In 1931 Sgt. Hudson was returned to the U.S. and stationed at Rockwell Field, San Diego, California.

While at Rockwell Field Sgt. Hudson was a part of a team of officers and enlisted men headed by the late General H. H. Arnold (then a lieutenant colonel) which conducted some of the first experiments in ground-to-air radio communications.

Sgt. Hudson recalled that while the Air Corps was in its comparative infancy a non-commissioned officer assigned to flying usually had several duties. He was the ground crew chief, flight engineer and took care of the radio communications when they were installed in the aircraft. In today's specialized Air Force there is an airman assigned to each of these duties.

After serving at Rockwell Field Sgt. Hudson was transferred to March Field at Riverside, California. At this air base he worked on the old Boeing PW-9 pursuit type aircraft, and served as the flight engineer on Ford and Fokker tri-motor transports. While at March he served under General Carl Spaatz (then a major and his group commander).

In 1936 Sgt. Hudson was discharged from the Air Corps. He returned to civilian life and in 1942 reenlisted in the U.S. Army Air Force after the beginning of World War II.

During World War II Sgt. Hudson was stationed at Castle Field, Merced, California and Minter Field, Bakersfield, California and at Luke Field, Arizona. During this period he was the flight engineer for Brigadier General Leland R. Hewitt, commander of the 35th and 37th Flying Training Wings.

In June 1945 he transferred to the Air Transport Command at Fairfield-Suisun Air Base (now Travis Air Force Base) and flew the Pacific run to Hawaii and back.

A heart attack suffered at Hickam Air Force Base, Hawaii in 1948 permanently grounded the sergeant and he spent six months in hospitals recovering.

Upon his release from the hospital Sgt. Hudson reenlisted in the Air Materiel Command at McClellan AFB, Sacramento. He changed his job assignment at McClellan to refueling and was assigned as non-commissioned officer in charge of a transient refueling detachment at the Medford Municipal Airport. He commanded this unit until 1952 when he was sent to Tachikawa Air Force Base, Japan as NCOIC in charge of refueling at that base. He returned in 1954 from Japan and was assigned to Edwards Flight Test Center in California.

When Sgt. Hudson was discharged in September 1955 he had over 20 years service and could have retired. When he heard of the building of the Klamath Falls jet base he reenlisted for this base.

The veteran airman and his wife Maud have purchased a nine-acre farm and home on the Midland Road where they live with their two sons Richard, 10, and Arlin, 6, both students at Henley Elementary School.

"My wife and I consider Klamath Falls as our permanent home now," Sgt. Hudson said. "We like the hunting and fishing and outdoor life of the Klamath Basin."

Attendance Record Set

Owners and buyers from the Klamath Falls area clothing shops have helped establish a new attendance record for the West Coast Salesmen's Association Spring and Summer Market Week, which was recently held at the Sheraton-Palace Hotel in San Francisco.

Such was the comment of Arrangements Director Harry Bloom as he reported on the huge success of the 21st annual affair at a special meeting of the board of directors.

Bloom also pointed out that the smaller shops in the outlying areas can now compete on the same fashion scale as the department stores in the large metropolitan cities.

This is due to the fact that over 1,000 clothing manufacturers have banded together and, as a group, hold a market week, where they display the coming fashions and take style orders. A representative from a clothing store may order as little as one of a particular outfit or as many as is desired. This allows the smaller businessman to compete on a favorable scale with larger firms.

Among the more than 4,000 owners and buyers present were the following merchants of the Klamath Falls area. They were: Mrs. C. Lion and B. Franz of La Pointe's; Susan Hamilton, representing Marvins; Walter Kennett and Bea Wilkes, representing Miller's; and Mrs. W. Whytal, owner of Whytal's.

Dulles Planning Fishing Trip

Putting aside problems of weather balloons and "brink of war" debate, he and Mrs. Dulles will leave by air Sunday for the Abacos Islands in the Bahamas.

This Election Year Said Bad One For Dark Horse

By LYLE C. WILSON
United Press Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON (UP)—This presidential election year is a bad one for dark horse Democratic candidates.

It was not always so. The phrase, dark horse, was coined in 1844 to describe the unforeseen Democratic nomination of James K. Polk of Tennessee for President. He was the first dark horse and he defeate Kentucky's Henry Clay.

Polk's platform demanded "reannexation of Texas and reoccupation of Oregon." It favored tariff reform. Texas and Oregon will be factors in the fate of 1956 dark horses, but in conflict with each other.

The most discussed dark horse might expect some substantial support from Texas and some substantial opposition from Oregon. He is 49-year-old Frank J. Lausche, the five-term governor of Ohio. Lausche is the Democrat who publicly states that he voted in 1950 for Republican Robert A. Taft for the Senate, and that he did so because he thought Taft's Democratic opponent would be controlled by the labor bosses. Lausche also is a Catholic.

But it is far less his religion than his political independence that causes practically everyone to agree that Lausche could not be nominated in a Democratic convention this year or for some time to come. Organized labor cannot handle Lausche on his home grounds. But organized labor is ready for him in the party convention.

TOUGH COALITION

The great states of the north, east and west are the areas of the Democratic-Labor coalition. That coalition has the votes to stop Lausche cold, although he will own Ohio's 58-vote delegation as a favorite son. Lausche is shooting this year for the Senate seat of Republican George H. Bender, who succeeded Taft.

To the north, Democratic Gov. G. Mennen Williams of Michigan reigns as one of the real political surprises of current politics. Williams was once regarded as more an amateur than a political operator. He is 44 years old, a folksy, natty man who has made a green and white polka dot tie his political trademark.

In and out of the Roosevelt and Truman administrations from time to time, Williams served a hitch as Michigan's attorney general. He was elected governor in 1948 and he's still there with none in sight to displace him. His position in the Democratic party is secure.

Williams is in close partnership with organized labor, notably the CIO wing led by Walter Reuther which is dominant in Michigan's automotive industry. Williams would be strong wherever Lausche would be weak, but probably not strong enough anywhere this year.

The list of dark horses would reach from here to way out yonder. Count in two very old men, Sen. Alben W. Barkley, 78, of Kentucky, and speaker Sam Rayburn, 74, Texas. Neither is a likely nominee. But if the 1956 Democratic convention were deadlocked as it was 32 years ago in Madison Square Garden, New York, the party wou be forced to a holding operation —a caretaker ticket. Barkley and Rayburn would be safe and generally acceptable. So would a good many others.

MANY POSSIBILITIES

Every native born Democratic governor and United States senator plus numerous members of the House of Representatives has at some time dreamed of being President. Some dream it night after night. The dark horses are too numerous to list. But they will be on hand in Chicago, ready, willing and, possibly, able.

Of the senators, Stuart Symington of Missouri is most often mentioned in Washington debates. Symington, at 54, is serving his first Senate term to which he was elected in 1952. He was first secretary of the separate Air Force. Although not born in a log cabin, Symington can and does claim in his self-edited biography that he got his first job at the age of 12—office boy—and earned $2 a week. He used to be a newspaperman himself, a reporter on the Baltimore Sun. The record establishes Symington as a successful businessman and government administrator. He held high office under both Presidents Roosevelt and Truman.

There have been booklets for Oklahoma's Sen. Mike Monroney, another former newspaperman on the Daily Oklahoman and the Scripps-Howard Oklahoma City News. Mike broke in on the Oklahoman to succeed your correspondent on a sports desk assignment back there in 1920 or thereabouts. He is 53 years old. Monroney, like Symington, would be a candidate in the left-of-center tradition.

Oklahoma's senior Senator, Robert Samuel Kerr, was a dark horse candidate four years ago and might be again. But Kerr did not accumulate a vast fortune in gas and oil by throwing good money after bad. Chances are he won't go in this year.

NEW STARS

There are bright new Democratic stars in the East: Pennsylvania's Gov. George M. Leader and New Jersey's Robert B. Meyner, the latter favored, too, by the reports of romance with charming Miss Margaret Truman.

Meyner and Leader are serving first terms to which they were elected on the left-of-center foundations, which usually are essential to the Democratic candidates outside the South. That is not to say that the South is wholly conservative. There are New Deal southerners who would meet northern and eastern specifications, bar one. That is the matter of racial integration.

That is bad enough. Georgia's Sen. Richard B. Russell generally is regarded as among the most able men of his party. He made the race four years ago, lost to the labor men who would have none of him. What he failed to lose there he lost to those delegates who rate racial integration the top issue. Russell had enough. He's not a candidate this year.

There are others. But as previously reported, this does not seem to be a dark horse year.

IVAN "IKE" CONGLETON, president of the Oregon State Junior Chamber of Commerce, will participate in the institution of the new Klamath Agency Junior Chamber of Commerce. The institution will be held at a dinner meeting at 7 p.m. Saturday at the Chiloquin Masonic Lodge. The new chapter is being chartered by the Klamath Falls chapter. Congleton will also speak at a dinner meeting of the Klamath Falls group at 6:30 p.m. Monday at the Winema Hotel, and in Medford Tuesday. John Heilbronner is the president of the new group, believed to be the only Junior Chamber chapter located on an Indian reservation.
