

FAMILY ALBUM

BY LYLE DOWNING

Attorney J. C. O'Neill

Now

Then

A bunch of the boys were whooping it up back in 1932 in the offices of the secretary of state in Salem.

As there were no state or national holidays falling on that day, the celebrants were commemorating the fall of Constantinople.

When the celebration was at its height, someone dared a young attorney in the group, Joe O'Neill, to file his candidacy for district attorney in Klamath County.

O'Neill took the dare and plunked down the twenty-dollar filing fee and signed on the dotted line.

Back in Klamath Falls the next day with a headache, O'Neill found himself in a most embarrassing position. Before going to Salem on legal business, he had promised to support Hardin Blackmer, Republican candidate, for district attorney.

LOTS OF PUBLICITY
Newspapers all over the state had carried an account of O'Neill's entrance into the district attorney race which had upset the political apple cart in Klamath County.

O'Neill, who had no political aspirations, made up for his dereliction by getting out and hustling votes for Blackmer who was elected.

"That is the only time I ever got mixed up in politics," O'Neill explained. "Many lawyers seek public office, but I have been satisfied to remain in private practice."

O'Neill, who was born October 6, 1901 in Sherburne, Minnesota, hung out his shingle in Klamath Falls after graduating from Willamette University in 1927.

WAS JANITOR
Before he obtained his law degree, O'Neill worked as a janitor, drug clerk and school teacher in Minnesota and North Dakota. The family moved to Holiday, North Dakota when O'Neill was 18 years old. His father, who also was an attorney, temporarily gave up his legal activities to try his hand at farming in North Dakota. This venture was a failure.

In 1920, the O'Neills migrated to Klamath Falls. Joe worked a year in the Pelican Bay Lumber Mill.

The family then went back to Holiday.
"About that time," O'Neill said, "I decided to take my father's advice and become a lawyer. So I returned to Oregon and enrolled at Willamette."

During the 29 years he has practiced in Klamath County, O'Neill has defended scores of persons charged with crimes. Many of his clients were what he described as "characters."

HOT SHOT JOE
He recalls one "character," Bootblack Joe Daniels, alias "Hot Shot Joe," who was saved from the noose by a hung jury. The prosecution decided not to try the alleged slayer again.

O'Neill has tried some 40 murder cases and the majority of his clients were acquitted.

Last year O'Neill started what he says is his biggest job. He was retained as general counsel for the Klamath Tribe to protect the Indian's rights in the liquidation of the Klamath Reservation.

O'Neill believes the Klamath Indians can be successfully integrated into the population of Klamath County. However, he does not believe the reservation can be terminated by August 15, 1958, the date set by Congress.

Mr. and Mrs. O'Neill, who reside at 1130 North Main, have two daughters, Joan Fugilton and Marilyn Williams, both of Klamath Falls. They also have five grandchildren. (Listed in the O'Neill Sunday, 10:15 p.m., radio station KFLW.)
