Private Car Stops Over In Klamath; T-Bone Says Station Okay After Check

Bright, crisp sunshine greeted Mr. T-Bone Towser, dignified, gracious St. Bernard, as he stepped off the Virginia City at 7:35 a.m. Monday for a morning stroll about the Southern Pacific station. The five-year-old St. Bernard obviously enjoys traveling by private car and posed sedately for his photograph with Lucius Beebe and Charles Clegg, publisher and editor of the Territorial Enterprise in Virginia City, on Nevada's Comstock Lode.

The private car is a successor to the Gold Coast which was retired a year ago. It was built by the Pullman Standard Company of Chicago, is 93 feet long, weighs 185,000 pounds, produces 4,000 watts of electricity from generators for its own use and is equipped with hot and cold running water and music throughout. The 23-foot drawing room is highlighted by a Venetian marble fireplace and crystal chandeliers. Upholstered furniture, built to scale, adds to the feeling of spaciousness. Live wall-to-wall rugs for each room were hand woven especially for the car and the gold plated lighting fixtures are from France. There are three staterooms, each with a bed and upper berth and each with its own bathroom. The dining room seats eight and one wall is a huge gold vein diamond paneled mirror which was manufactured in Italy especially for the car. Walter presides over the modern galley with ice box, double stainless steel sink units, propane stove with ligated oven and broiler, a 50-bottle wine cellar and food storage space and music. Each room is wired for music, including the crew's quarters, and a specially designed Ampex amplifier plays recorded background music. Each room has its own volume control and the larger rooms have two speakers, one at each end, insuring an even volume of music throughout the room.

Beebe and Clegg, whose "The American West" topped the nation's non-fiction best-seller list for more than three months, are authors of numerous books on Western history. They have been doing additional research and will have another book out soon.
