Art Carney Changes Sewer Togs For Top Hat, Tails

By CHARLES MERCER
NEW YORK (AP)—Art Carney is a gentleman of acute bearing who is slightly troubled because he has been hearing crickets these past winter nights outside his home in suburban Yonkers.

GRANGE NEWS

MIDLAND GRANGE HOME ECONOMICS CLUB
By Kathryn Smith
The Midland Grange Home Economics Club met at the home of Alice Hoover on Del Patti Lane, March 6.

But nothing personal troubles him. Tonight he dons top-hat and tails to play a dramatic comedy role in a French farce on Star Stage (NBC-TV). Since he regularly plays the role of a sewer worker as Ed Norton on Jackie Gleason's 'The Honeymooners' (CBS-TV, Saturday evenings), this would appear to be quite a switch.

Actually Carney defies all easy journalistic angles. He's that rare specimen, an authentic comic genius who doesn't want to play Hamlet—yet isn't even looking for his own TV show. Among other attributes, he combines wit with lucky timing.

believed he ever could play the role of a real villain, Carney said. "Oh, sure. Just ask my wife." A few minutes later when the earnest inquirer asked Carney whether he'd ever analyzed exactly what he does when masses burst laugh, he paused thoughtfully, fork suspended. At that moment, with miraculous timing, a waiter overturned a tray of glasses with a deafening crash and the restaurant suddenly was silent. "Tension," Carney said to the waiter. And to the inquirer: "That's what I do. Overturn a tray and make everybody look at me."
