

Lakeview Woman Returns After Missionary Work

LAKEVIEW — A heavy snow storm heralded the return of Frances Cory to her home in Lakeview after four and one-half years in Brazil as a missionary.

Snow was a welcome sight, Miss Cory said, after her years in a climate so mild that houses had no central heating facilities.

As a trained missionary for the New Tribes, an interdenominational missionary group, Miss Cory worked first in Belem in northern Brazil, then in an orphanage for Brazilian children in the state of Sao Paulo and more recently at twice daily with some meat, vegetables and fruit. It is customary to serve the red beans, cooked with salt, pepper and cooking oil, with a spoonful of plain boiled rice on top.

In the larger cities, Coca-Cola and American candy bars are available, she continued. One native soft drink, called "guina," a clear, carbonated bottled drink made from a nut is also readily available.

"Women just don't wear hats in Brazil, not even to our church," Miss Cory said. "But they do carry umbrellas which are handy for the sudden rainstorms and for protection from the sun. Also, except in the larger cities, women seldom wear stockings."

"There are ready-made clothes in the larger stores in Sao Paulo and Rio de Janeiro, but none in the rural communities. Nearly all of the women sew and are expert at copying designs pictured in mail order catalogues," she added.

During her stay at the small village of Vianopolis, she took care of children of American and Canadian missionaries while their parents did advance study in the Portuguese language. This rural section, about a thousand miles inland, had few telephones, used ox teams for hauling and the automobile had not replaced the horse and buggy. Much of the travel was done by flat boats on the rivers. The climate was fairly dry and temperate. At Belem, just over the equator, rainfall is heavy. Sao Paulo is at sea level and has a very mild climate, she said.

Miss Cory was sponsored by the Lakeview group of the Church of the Open Bible. She is at home for an indefinite stay to care for her brother's three children who lost their mother at Thanksgiving time.

PTA Awards Scholarship

Tom Grigsby, son of Mr. and Mrs. B. E. Grigsby and a 1955 graduate of Klamath Union High School, now attending Pacific University, will receive the Fremont Junior High School Parent-Teacher Association scholarship for a second year. It was announced by the executive board of the PTA.

Tom was an outstanding music student at KUHS and entered the Forest Grove university last fall as recipient of the Fremont PTA scholarship, the first given by the organization. The award is available only to a student planning to teach in the elementary schools.

In addition to a heavy first-year course at the university Tom has taught a two-hour course in band in the Hillsboro elementary schools. He also gives private lessons in hand instruments and is vice president of the Pacific Singers, the a cappella choir of Pacific University.

He belongs to the school's barbershop quartet, which participated in the contest held at Hillsboro last month. The quartet appeared on television from a Portland station in February.

He is secretary of the pledge class of Gamma Sigma fraternity. Tom hopes to return to his home town to teach.

Shasta, Trinity Land Reserved

WASHINGTON (UP) — The Department of Interior has reserved 12,622 acres of public land in Northern California for government use in the construction of the Trinity River Diversion Project.

Acting Interior Secretary Clarence A. Davis said the land includes 80 acres of unreserved public land, 200 acres formerly included in a power site reservation and 12,342 acres within the Trinity and Shasta National Forests.

The area is just northwest of Shasta Dam and Reservoir.
