Westinghouse Strike Ends After 156 Workless Days

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Westinghouse Electric Corp. strike, one of the longest in the nation's modern labor relations history is over. Strikers weary of picketing idle plants for 156 days headed happily back to work. The dispute — punctuated at times by violence — probably cost hundreds of millions of dollars in lost wages and business. Settlement came last night when the striking International Union of Electrical Workers (IUE) voted to accept a peace plan proposed two weeks ago by government mediators, but changed somewhat in the union's favor since then.

The new contract gives IUE workers annual pay raises ranging from 5 to 22 cents an hour, added to their pre-strike average of $2.10 an hour. Additional raises up to 12 cents an hour were provided for skilled workers. Pensions and insurance benefits were improved. For example, the company will take over full cost of employe insurance after November 1958. Westinghouse announced that nine of its consumer products plants will get back into production today. They are at Springfield, Mass.; Metuchen, Bloomfield, Belleville and Trenton, N.J.; Fairmont, W.Va.; Elmira, N.Y.

and Mansfield and Columbus, Ohio. The bulk of the 44,000 strikers represented by IUE are expected to be on the job again in a matter of days. However, at some heavy machinery plants, notably the company's East Pittsburgh works, it will take a month to restore production. The strike, started in mid-October, delayed by nearly half a year introduction of the 1956 line of Westinghouse products. For that reason, the company now expects to step up output "considerably beyond pre-strike levels at all consumer product plants."

A strike of nearly 10,000 Westinghouse workers represented by another union, the independent United Electrical Workers (UEI), will continue pending a separate settlement. But an early agreement was expected, based on the IUE terms.
