

Tight Money May Be Cause Of Auto Buying Cost Gain

NEW YORK (AP)—Rising costs of buying autos and appliances on time and difficulty in getting cash from the small loan companies are seen today as the next impact of tight money on consumers.

The firms that finance your auto purchase first borrow that money before they, in effect, lend it to you by handling instalment business for the auto dealers.

Interest charges on the funds they borrow are going up and the big auto finance companies say if their business is to remain profitable the wholesale finance charges they assess the dealers must go up, too. Auto dealers, in turn, will be less inclined to shave much off the prices suggested by the auto makers.

In short, your car is likely to cost more because money is tight. Small loan companies who lend you money to meet bills or to buy from the stores also borrow much of that money first. It's costing them more and some of the smaller ones are closing their doors.

"More independent loan offices have been offered us for sale than at any time in the past 30 years," says Lyle S. Woodcock, vice president of the Liberty Loan Corp., St. Louis. "In nearly every case it was the same story: tight money and high interest rates."

The big boys are hurting, too. William T. Christian, vice president of the Household Finance Corp., Chicago—and president of the National Consumer Finance Assn., opening its annual meeting in Miami Beach, Fla., tomorrow—says: "Since we borrow substantial amounts from commercial banks on short term loans, our expenses of doing business have increased proportionately."

Shortage of funds may limit the volume of consumer credit, says William B. Paul Jr., president of the Family Finance Corp., Wilmington, Del. While A. M. Constans, president of State Loans, Bellevue, Wash., sees higher interest charges curtailing both the incentive and the ability of small loan companies to cope with the growth in consumer credit demands. And Wilbur A. Bean, board chairman of Equitable Credit Corp., Albany, N.Y., predicts tight money through all of next year and perhaps into 1958.
