

Salem Student Winner In Cover Design Contest

Glen Wagers of Salem, second-year student in commercial illustration and design, was named winner Monday evening of the contest for the cover design for the program for the next meeting of the Northwest Chapter, Screen Printers of America.

Judges were Mrs. Catherine Lake, OTI business technology instructor; Wayne Rawson, instructor of elective classes and J. E. Brookins, technology education supervisor at OTI.

Nine of the 10 eligible students submitted entries. All of the work on the program cover will be done by screen printing process by the screen printing technology class at Oregon Tech which is taught by Earl H. Bairey, William Fink, a Klamath Falls free lance artist, is instructor of the commercial illustration and design course.

Second place was won by Pat Williams, of Klamath Falls, and third by Wayne Rick of Malin. Both are commercial illustration and design students at OTI.

The cover will be completed in a week for the next meeting of the screen printers to be held in Portland in November.

All 10 of the eligible students have entered a contest to produce the cover for Oregon Tech's yearbook, the Owl, which will be a classroom project of the screen printing technology course. The cover for the yearbook will go to press on November 9, Bairey said.

They have also entered a contest for the best design of OTI basketball posters which will be made by screen printing process as classroom work. Deadline for the poster designs is October 29.

Annual Bull Sale Slated

The 13th annual Modoc County Range Bull Sale will be held in Cedarville October 13 and 14.

In 1944, the year the first sale was held, the committee wrote "we hope our efforts will tend to create the desired improvement of quality of beef cattle in Modoc and adjacent counties." This has been accomplished to a great degree. From the sale beginning until 1950, three-plus bulls were allowed to sell, since that time bulls must grade two minus or better. In 1945 only 20 per cent of the bulls offered were in the two grade or better. In 1955, 12 years later, nearly 70 per cent of the bulls were two grade or better. From these figures it is apparent that the consignors are doing their part to improve the beef herds of the area.

Prices paid at the past sales have indicated that the commercial cattlemen are willing to pay for the higher quality bulls. In 1955 the sale average was $408.85 but the two plus bulls averaged $406.11 and the two minus bulls averaged $362.

The 1956 sale will offer some 65 top bulls of the type the range man wants and in the condition to do some good. They will be sifted and graded by competent men to make the sale offering the best yet.

BLM Elects District Men

LAKEVIEW—Jerry O'Leary of Paisley, Hugh Cahill of Adel, and R. A. Long of Fort Rock were elected advisory board members for their respective districts when the ballots were counted Monday afternoon, October 8, at the office of the Bureau of Land Management in Lakeview.

O'Leary, representing the sheepmen, is from Precinct 2, Paisley, and Silver Lake. Cahill's precinct, Number 4, is for South Warner, Beattie Butte and Fish Creek. Long represents Precinct 5, Fort Rock and Christmas Lake.

Al Leonard, range conservationist for the BLM, conducted the meeting and the committee to open the ballots was made up of J. C. Clark, W. H. Leehmann and Con Fitzgerald Jr.

PROGRAM DESIGN COVER contest winner at Oregon Tech was Glen Wagers, left, of Salem, whose design was chosen for the program cover for the November meeting of the Northwest Chapter, Screen Printers. The covers for the organization's next six meetings will be produced in the screen printing technology classes at OTI of which Earl H. Bairey, right, is instructor. Instructor of commercial illustration and design is William H. Finch, center. Wagers is a second year commercial illustration and design student.

Bull-Grading Winners Told

LAKEVIEW — Elmo Angele Jr. for the Future Farmers of America, and Sharon Ashcraft for 4-H, were the high score winners in the bull-grading contest held Friday afternoon, October 5, at the fairgrounds, as a preliminary to the annual Lake County Range Bull Sale. Each will receive a permanent plaque, with name engraved, from the First National Bank of Portland.

Lyn Fenimore, 400 and David Griffin, 390.

The contest is conducted annually as an educational opportunity for the boys and girls in commercial judging. The official judges, Harry Stearns of Crook County, Bill Farrell of Grant County, and Ray Stanfield of Lake County, explained in detail the reasons for their placings of the animals.

The entire class of 47 FFA members took part in the judging, according to their instructor, William Holloway, while Club Agent Lee Hansen reports 21 members of the 4-H livestock clubs included in the contest.

Angele scored 481 points out of a possible 500. The other boys included in the 10 high were Dan Heavilin, 480; John Counts, 478; Jim Hawk, 478; Glen Vandergaw, 478; Bruce Gelinsky, 474; Randy Smith, 473; Richard Cook, 472; Doug Tracy, 469; Bill Galloway, 464; and Terry Pearson, 460.

In the 4-H group Susan Klippel tied for 464 points with Sharon Ashcraft, but other factors in the judging gave the first place to Sharon. Others in the 10 high were Joy Kerr, 461; David Schaffner, 457; Larry Maxwell, 448; Wally Warner, 432; Maurice Odgaard, 414; Danny Cornett, 400; Mary

Search Renewed For C. C. Kelly

Sheriff's deputies renewed their search Wednesday at Lake of the Woods for the body of C. C. Kelly, 72-year-old retired Klamath Falls civil engineer, who disappeared at the resort last Friday night.

Sheriff Murray Britton said he had assigned all available deputies to drag the lake. Volunteers also joined the search Wednesday morning.

"We have been hampered in our search," the sheriff explained, "by lack of any information as to where Mr. Kelly was fishing at the time he disappeared."

The supposed drowning victim's capsized outboard motorboat was found Saturday morning. Kelly was last seen on the lake Friday evening.

Night Club Owners Sad; Americans Retire Earlier

By BOB THOMAS
HOLLYWOOD (AP) — The trouble with the night club business is that Americans are going to bed earlier.

It's as simple as that, says Frank Sennes, one of the most successful club operators. Night club owners are singing the blues all over the United States. In Los Angeles, three big nighteries have shut down in recent months, and the pattern is repeated elsewhere. Television is touted as the main villain, but Sennes argues otherwise.

"Of course, TV has had a bad effect on night clubs," he said. "People are more content to stay at home for the entertainment. Besides, they are reluctant to pay $20 or $30 to see a performer they may have seen last Sunday on TV."

"But I think the main reason for bad business is that people don't stay up as late."

"The war was great for clubs. Everyone had relatives and friends in the service and they were worried about them getting killed. So they stayed out late and tried to enjoy themselves."

"Now people go to bed earlier. Night clubs can do a good business on the first show, but the late show kills them. I've seen clubs you could shoot a cannon through on the late show and not hit anyone. It's the same way everywhere. If you can't get a good crowd in for the second show, you can't make money."

Sennes, a Warren, Ohio, boy who made good with 33 clubs in Cleveland, Cincinnati and other Ohio cities, isn't discouraged. In fact, tonight he starts his fourth year of operating the Moulin Rouge here with a show billed as costing $225,000.

"I think you can still do business if you give the public a big, lavish show they can't get on TV and if you can lure them in for the late show," he said. "To do that, we have a policy of a flat $3 per person for the late show. We give them a dinnerette and a show with 100 people on the stage. You can't beat a deal like that."

SP Service Protest Filed

Mrs. Josephine Kittredge, Republican candidate for state representative, filed a telegraphic protest Wednesday with the Oregon Public Utility Commission over the proposed curtailment of Southern Pacific passenger service through Klamath Falls.

D. J. Russell, Southern Pacific president, announced last week the railroad planned to cut the schedule of its streamliner Shasta Daylight between San Francisco and Portland via Klamath Falls to three round trips a week.

Russell claimed that winter passenger travel did not justify daily schedules.

In a telegram to Charles H. Heltzel, Oregon Public Utilities commissioner, Mrs. Kittredge stated:

"Urgent request is made to use your office to restore full and adequate railroad service of the Southern Pacific's Daylight train to and from Klamath Falls."

The California Public Utilities Commission already has ordered an investigation. Tuesday the California commission ordered an investigation into the "adequacy and sufficiency" of the Southern Pacific passenger service between San Francisco and Portland. A hearing will be held October 15.

"People all along the Southern Pacific Shasta Route in Oregon are up in arms over this proposed curtailment of service," Mrs. Kittredge said in explaining her protest to the Oregon commission. "I can see no reason why the railroad should do such a thing."
