

Weapons Uncovered In Quentin

SAN QUENTIN, Calif. (UP) — San Quentin Prison guards kept a wary eye on the overcrowded penitentiary today as the result of a shakedown that yielded a cache of guns, ammunition and prison-made "blives."

The shakedown began Wednesday night with the discovery of a .38 caliber revolver in the south cell block. Two other .38s were later found in the prison laundry.

Along with the guns, guards found a bag containing an undisclosed number of shells and nine rounds of .38 ammunition which apparently had been smuggled into the prison.

Acting Warden Louis Nelson then ordered a search of the whole prison. Guards found a quantity of razor sharp knives fashioned by the inmates out of contraband materials.

While the shakedown was going on, convicts in the south cell block clanged on their cell bars and shouted.

Guards speculated a group of convicts were preparing for a break—possibly tonight—during a business meeting of top prison officials.

Meanwhile, prison officials believed there was no connection between the hidden weapons and an abortive escape attempt of two Southern California robbers, Paul Proger, 35, and Richard C. Campos, 23.

The two men smuggled hacksaw blades into their cells, which are four cells apart in the west block. They began sawing just after the 1 a.m. checkup Thursday.

They managed to escape into a staircase leading to the lower cell block tier when a guard surprised them.

Proger and Campos were ordered into solitary.

Their cellmates, William Pillow and Manuel Perez, were placed in isolation after they insisted they slept so soundly they did not hear Proger and Campos sawing.

ON THE AIRWAYS, former Interior Secretary Douglas McKay discussed his views on campaign issues with KFLW Staffer Floyd Wynne. McKay also made a plea for votes in his race for United States senator against Democrat Wayne L. Morse. 'Copters Save Army Tug Crew

FORT BUCKNER, Okinawa (AP) — The Ryukyus command announced Friday night air-sea rescue helicopters have lifted 28 men from an Army tug stranded on a reef off Okinawa.

Twelve-foot waves were washing over the deck... as the last of the crew including five Americans—was rescued," the Army said. None was from the Pacific Northwest.

The others were Filipinos and Ryukyuan.

The brief statement disclosed the tug was hurled on the reef by stormy wind-whipped seas Thursday night while en route to rescue the Army tanker Yankee 482, which hit the same reef earlier in the day. The tanker, with 2 Americans, 21 Japanese and a Filipino aboard, was reported in no immediate danger.

Chief To Face Queries Over Television Tonight

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS
Adlai Stevenson's proposals on hydrogen bomb tests and the military draft remained in the forefront of political debate today, despite President Eisenhower's assertion that he has said his "last words" on both subjects.

Stevenson, the Democratic presidential candidate, told a rally in Oakland, Calif., last night that he intends to continue to push his suggestion that the United States take the lead in efforts to halt the testing of H-bombs.

"Leaders must lead," Stevenson said, "and where the issue is mankind's survival, there can be no last word until the supreme goal of lasting peace is achieved."

In Elko, Nev., Vice President Nixon said he felt Eisenhower is right to drop the H-bomb and draft subjects. But Nixon, who has been campaigning far and wide for the GOP ticket, said he will keep on talking on both issues "until Mr. Stevenson makes it clear he is leaving a position which is unsound."

OPPOSITION STATED
On several occasions, Eisenhower has stated his opposition to Stevenson's suggestion that the United States suspend its H-bomb tests, provided the other atomic powers agree to do likewise. Eisenhower has said the testing of nuclear weapons is "an indispensable part" of the defense program.

And in reply to Stevenson's call for ending the draft "at the earliest possible moment consistent with the national safety," Eisenhower has said selective service cannot be halted "under world conditions of today."

Questioned on both topics, Eisenhower told his Washington news conference, "I have said my last words on these subjects."

Eisenhower's main campaign activity today will be a nationwide television-radio broadcast during which he will submit to questions from a panel of 100 men and women.

UNREHEARSED
The program, sponsored by the National Citizens for Eisenhower Committee, was described by White House press secretary James C. Hagerty as an "impromptu, entirely unrehearsed press conference." He said the panel of questioners will be composed of "cross-section Americans" from all around the country.

Stevenson moved into the southern California area today for what his aides have described as a "saturation" effort to win votes. While the Democratic nominee speaks at rallies in Fresno, Long Beach and San Diego, five other top campaigners will address simultaneous gatherings in surrounding communities.

The five are Governors Meyner of New Jersey, Leader of Pennsylvania, and Clement of Tennessee, and Senators Gore of Tennessee and Humphrey of Minnesota. All but Clement joined Stevenson last night in a nationally televised discussion of Stevenson's health proposals.

STALEMATE
During this program, which originated in San Francisco, Stevenson said that "in four years of this administration no real breakthrough in the battle for the people's health has been proposed."

While stressing his opposition to "any form of socialized medicine," Stevenson expanded on his previously outlined proposals for federal loans and grants to underwrite expanded private health insurance programs. He has said his aim is to see to it that medical care is denied to no one because of inability to pay.

Both Nixon and Sen. Estes Kefauver of Tennessee, the Democratic vice presidential candidate, were scheduled to make separate appearances today at the National Corn Picking Contest in Columbus, Neb.

In his speech prepared for the Columbus gathering, Nixon said the Democrats were guilty of what he called a "cruel hoax" in plumping for high rigid price supports on basic farm crops. He said restoration of such props would arrest what he said is an "upward trend in farm income."

Nixon appealed to farmers to support the administration farm program built around flexible price props, a soil bank plan and efforts to expand markets for farm products.

GOOD PROGRAM
The vice president said this program "is working and will continue to work because it cuts right to the heart of the problem."

Kefauver last night accused the Eisenhower administration of what he said was "political tinkering" with the soil bank. He said most soil bank money is being directed to states where Republicans are, as he put it, "in the greatest trouble."

Speaking in Bayard, Iowa, Kefauver said the soil bank "has been cut and trimmed to fit the political purposes of the Eisenhower administration in this election year."

Democratic Rep. Powell of New York sprang a big political surprise when he announced he was supporting Eisenhower for reelection. Powell, one of three Negro members of Congress, made his announcement after a talk with Eisenhower.

While the Democratic nominee speaks at rallies in Fresno, Long Beach and San Diego, five other top campaigners will address simultaneous gatherings in surrounding communities.
