Well Planned Mixing Center Key To Better Kitchen Work

Any homemaker will tell you that there are two key points to making the best of your kitchen: adequate storage space and putting this space where it is most convenient for the housewife.

And what could be more logical than a mixing center with space for all the ingredients for your favorite recipe with a spice rack situated an arm's length away? Two designs shown here accomplish just this.

Free plans for both the mixing center cabinet itself and the handy spice rack may be obtained by writing the Douglas Fir Plywood Association, Tacoma 2, Washington.

Here again is a case where the plan can be used as is or may be altered to suit individual needs. Few kitchens are the same and occasionally variations from the basic plan design are necessary.

The mixing center cabinet provides beautifully arranged space for all common ingredients for cakes, pies and other delicacies. The spice rack immediately above is a natural in this position.

The sliding spice rack contains a tuck-away shelf utilizing the maximum available space and providing for tall bottles as well as small cans and boxes. There's room for variation whenever an unusual kitchen design is encountered.

Redecorating Living Rooms

Now that autumn's here, does your living room seem tired, unfriendly, uncomfortable? If you are suddenly filled with an urge to change it all—consider the possibility of redecorating without spending a single cent according to Family Circle Magazine.

Evan Frances, interior decorator, says that by moving furniture around, your living room looks new and exciting and actually feels more comfortable. In the October issue of Family Circle Magazine, she gives a few simple rules that can help save wear and tear on floors, muscles and tempers.

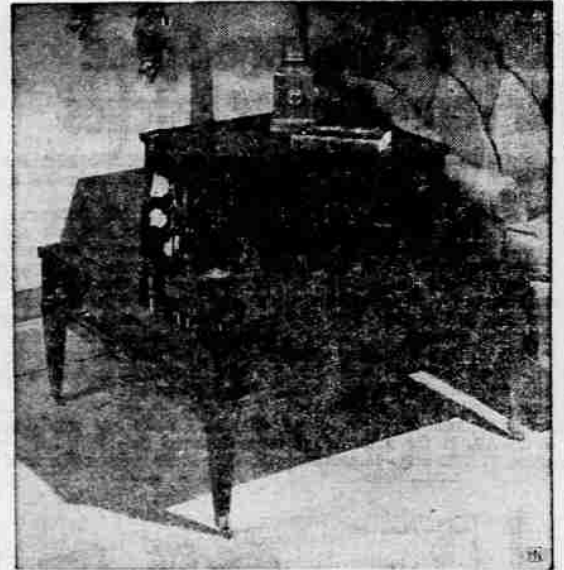

She suggests you begin with a floor plan and draw in the furniture placements you would like. Make all trial-and-error moves with pencil on paper before you actually move any furniture.

What is the most attractive natural, decorative, or architectural feature of your living room? Is it a lovely view outside your window? A brick fireplace and hearth? Whatever it is, make it the focal point for a main seating grouping of sofa and chairs. Then create a smaller conversational grouping in a corner of the living room: Two chairs in tete-a-tete position or a chair and end table for welcome isolation, when reading or sewing.

Try to avoid stringing chairs and other furniture along the walls and edges of a room, lest you give the room and uncoordinated feeling and the wall-hugging chairs the look of strays.

If possible, place one piece of furniture at right angles to a wall—a sofa, a desk, a cabinet with finished back. By so doing you can add dimension or perspective to a wall, relieve the boxlike appearance of some rooms, and if desired, create a room divider.

No need to worry about walls' being barren because you've moved furniture away from them. A tall leafy plant, an unusual wall-paper treatment, wall-hung bookshelves, a wall-bracketed lighting fixture, or a group of paintings can give your walls high design and good purpose.

THIS ATTRACTIVE corner table reveals its Italian Provincial ancestry in its legs and styling. Available in mahogany or cherry, it has antiqued brass door pulls and casters. The top section is not merely decorative, but may be used for storage. (Brandt Cabinet Works, Inc.).

Eastern Oregon Shrubs Described

An easy guide to identifying 30 Eastern Oregon shrubs is now available in a single-sheet circular published by the Oregon State College extension service.

Titled, "Eastern Oregon Shrub Quiz," the circular lists and has pictures of the foliage of 30 different shrubs found east of the Cascades. Persons taking the quiz are asked to name the shrubs from the pictures. An accompanying circular gives answers to the quiz.

The teaching aid was developed for use by 4-H clubs, as a quiz sheet for study groups, and as a handy, reference guide for visitors and others on outings. Copies are available from county extension offices or the OSC bulletin clerk.
