

BIDS WILL BE INVITED soon for construction of a new First Methodist Church building with parlor-office annex at Dunsuir. Plans by Morrison and Howard, Klamath Falls architects, were accepted at a special quarterly conference of the congregation on October 6. Completion of these first two units of a three-unit building program will make an architectural and aesthetic contribution to the town of Dunsuir and will provide the largest public building outside of the school system, according to the Rev. O. E. Terrell, pastor. The building program was initiated in 1954 and the new portions will be adjacent to the present church and parsonage at Oak and Shasta. Building will commence as soon as weather conditions permit.

State Workers Provide Aid To Physically Handicapped

The national spotlight is on "Employment of the Physically Handicapped." Locally, the Oregon State Employment Office hopes to enlighten prospective employers and the populace and enable them to learn why hiring the handicapped is good business.

Julius Guintoni, local physical handicapped representative, is part of a team which enables handicapped workers to secure jobs and become a community asset.

Guintoni outlined the coordination between his office and the Division of Vocational Rehabilitation, Salem, with a representative in Eugene.

"For example," he said, "sometimes a man loses certain facilities that no longer allow him to perform the job he was doing before his accident. Then we call Eugene and when the rehabilitation representative arrives, we discuss the possibilities and potentialities the handicapped person has."

"If our man can benefit, he is sent to school to learn a new vocation. Recently, we sent a man to OTI to learn a trade when he was no longer able to perform heavy labor."

Guintoni explained one of the duties of his office is to place the physically handicapped person in a position where he will be able to perform adequately.

"It's really two problems," he said, "one of training and the other of placement."

He related that many local employers are cooperative and said his office has placed about a dozen people in various jobs in the city. Guintoni added that the biggest problem is to convince employers that the physically handicapped are able to perform more than most believe.

"Employers are very favorable to our program," he continued, "but a man has to run his business in the most efficient manner possible. That's the reason we must investigate thoroughly, not only the employer, but the individual, so as to render the best service possible to both."

"Yes," he concluded, "certainly from our standpoint and from the standpoint of many employers, hiring the handicapped is good business."
