Teamsters Challenge Court On Probe In Union Affairs

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Teamsters Union has challenged the right of the courts to delve into the internal affairs of labor organizations.

The court-embattled union made its contention Wednesday in an answer to a rank-and-file members' suit challenging legality of James R. Hoffa's election as the union's new president.

Federal District Judge F. Dickerson Letts has issued a temporary restraining order barring Hoffa from taking over the top job in the nation's largest labor union, pending further litigation in the suit.

The rank-and-file group contends that more than half the delegates to the recent teamsters convention, which elected Hoffa overwhelmingly to succeed Dave Beck, were selected illegally and hand-picked to rig the balloting for Hoffa.

Both Hoffa and Beck have been accused by the Senate Rackets Investigating Committee of corruption.

The Teamsters Union maintained in its answer Wednesday that courts lack jurisdiction to delve into "political affairs of a voluntary, unincorporated association," or question its election procedures.

The union also said the plaintiffs failed to exhaust their avenues of possible appeals within the union and came into court with "unclean hands." The union said some of the plaintiffs participated in local elections of convention delegates and did not protest at the time.

The court case comes up again before Judge Letts next Monday on whether to continue the ban against Hoffa's taking office and whether to name a receiver to take charge of the union temporarily.
