Record Budget Set For Highway Work In Oregon

PORTLAND (AP) — A record-setting budget of $87,589,000 for the calendar year 1958 and a $44,520,300 program for starting work on new highway projects in the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1958, were approved Friday by the state Highway Commission.

The budget represents the amount of money—including state and federal funds—which the commission plans to spend next year, the commission said. This year's budget was $67,987,000.

The 44 million dollar program is for new projects and acquisitions of right-of-way beginning next July 1.

In addition to this is an 11 million dollar Coast Highway program of improvement on the Mack Arch-Brookings section, to be paid for by a state bond issue.

Items in the budget include: $47,300,000 for construction; $8,250,000 for purchase of right-of-way; $1,651,000 for equipment purchase; $13,209,000 for maintenance; $7,079,000 for operation, including state parks; and $5,900,000 for payment of interest and for retirement of bonds.

All the programmed work is to be done with federal-state matching funds, on a basis of $92 federal money and $8 state money for interstate highway construction and 62,338 for non-interstate roads.

Right-of-way costs for interstate highways are estimated at $6,167,000 and at $1,415,300 for non-interstate.

Construction costs are estimated at $19,950,000 for interstate highways and $16,983,000 for non-interstate.

The budget adopted and the sum set up for the start of new work are not related. The budget represents the money the commission expects to be able to spend. The $44,520,300 represents the amount the commission is going to obligate itself for during the first year starting next July. Some of that may be contracted for late in 1958 but the money is not expected to be paid out until 1959.

The 1959 program was set up for five geographical divisions of the state: I, Portland area; II, Western Oregon north of Lane County; III, Western Oregon from Lane County south; IV, Central Oregon and V, Eastern Oregon.

These are the major items in it as approved by the commission:

JACK RAND, who furnishes a guide service to hunters in the Canby, California, area is shown above with a collection of his handmade decoys. The dekes are the genuine article . . . . mounted ducks and geese. Jack stuffs the birds and supports them with heavy wire frames. The frames are welded to a plate and the whole effect is extremely realistic. The question arises: which came first, the decoy or the duck? Do you have to have a decoy to get a duck to make a decoy? If so, how?

SUPERVISING THE WORK of Pauline Clark, left, and Pennie Knapp, right, is Frank Staples, arts and crafts director of the National Recreation Association. Staples, who was here recently, taught 55 students, most of them representing youth groups, how to use inexpensive materials in their youth work. The class was conducted by local youth agencies and the park and recreation department in cooperation with the National Recreation Association. Peering over Staples' shoulder, in the background, is Mrs. Chet Stinson. The classes were conducted in the old Klamath Armory, soon to be called the Klamath Auditorium.

Misery Had Lots Of Company In October Week

WASHINGTON (UP) — If you felt absolutely miserable four weeks ago, you had plenty of company.

The Public Health Service estimates 8,500,000 Americans spent at least one day in bed during the first week of October nursing colds, sore throats, flu and the like.

Surgeon General Leroy E. Burney said "a great many of the cases" undoubtedly were Asian flu, but the total was not broken down into diseases.

The average number of persons in bed each day with upper respiratory trouble during the week ended Oct. 5 was about 2,500,000. This compared with 200,000 in mid-July.

Worker Trapped In Rubbish; Saved By Crane

GLENDALE, Calif. (AP) — While helping unload rubbish from the back of a dump truck, Richard Alegria lost his footing and toppled into the refuse pit. The truck's load of debris—five tons of it — spilled on top of him.

Alegria, 31, was completely buried under the trash Friday. The truck drove away from the city incinerator pit. The crew Alegria was working with failed to notice he was missing.

A huge power shovel began eating into the trash that covered Alegria. Load after load was lifted and dropped into the white-hot incinerator.

Finally the shovel's jaws bit into the debris and clamped shut six inches above the trapped rubbish worker. Another rip by the shovel and Alegria would have been dropped into the incinerator — or mangled in the jaws.

Instead, the shovel merely uncovered Alegria, who climbed to safety. He was treated for abrasions.

Truman Asks Knight Probe

LOS ANGELES (UP)—Former President Harry S. Truman thinks there should be an investigation of Gov. Goodwin J. Knight's rumored withdrawal from the gubernatorial race.

The former chief executive told reporters Friday "There's a bug under the chips somewhere."

"Some sort of a deal has been made to get Gov. Knight out of the way," he said. When a newsman asked if he had any specific knowledge of a conspiracy, he replied, "I don't say that at all. I said there might be a conspiracy."

Truman also hinted there was a newspaper involved in the "deal," but he declined to name it.

HUMANE KILL

WASHINGTON (UP) — The National Humane Society said Saturday that Mrs. Eisenhower could have done a world of good the other day when she posed for photographers in a new beaver coat, if only she had "expressed a hope" the beavers were killed in humane traps.

Bus Company Prexy Here

The president of the Greyhound Corporation, 49-year-old Arthur S. Genet, said Saturday the firm's new branch office building will be very attractive, but added he was disappointed because "construction was not further along." The new building will be at 12th Street and Klamath Avenue.

Genet, who is on a 46,000 mile tour of the country in his capacity as president of the firm, stated the contractor had promised completion by the middle of this month. He inferred that he did not believe the target date would be met.

A former railroad executive, Genet is making his first visit to this area since the consolidation of the several Greyhound divisions west of the Rockies into Western Greyhound Lines last June.

On board his luxurious bus are such items as a refrigerator, cooler, conference table and two radio telephones.

"I get quite a kick out of riding down the highway," said the man who became the head of the inter-city bus carrier system less than two years ago, "and having the phone ring."

Primary purpose of the inspection trip is to gauge the rapidly accelerated growth of western communities in terms of future inter-city passenger movement.

He told a meeting of transportation experts recently, "we know that within the next 10 years the number of American communities entirely dependent upon buses for public transportation will increase 50,000 to over 100,000."

His party left here a few hours after arriving and departed for points south. He said that "we have lots of ground to cover before we get back home to Chicago, November 26."

Californian Kills Doe With Antlers

DORRIS—Roger Dodson of Dorris brought in a three-point deer at the end of the California season, but the set of horns was still in the velvet.

When he started to dress out the animal, he discovered he had actually shot a doe, but because the doe had horns, it was held to be a legal kill.
