

Science Aide To Ike Faces Many Problem

By ELTON C. FAY
 WASHINGTON (AP)—Dr. James R. Killian is moving from cloistered university life into one of the sharpest controversies and some of the knottiest problems Washington has seen in many a year.

Sitting on the right hand of President Eisenhower as "special assistant to the President for science and technology," the 53-year-old head of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology will find he also is concerned, directly or indirectly, with such matters as these:

1. Clamoring criticism from people in and out of Congress who demand to know (a) why we are supposedly behind Russia in the missile weapon field; (b) why Russia is ahead in the satellite launching business; (c) what is going to be done about it.
2. Money—should more be spent for military scientific projects?
3. The rivalry of the individual armed forces in weaponry, which Eisenhower calls "alleged inter-service competition."

Killian is no stranger to Washington activities, having served on an Army science advisory panel in 1951 and on a number of national foundation and scholarship boards.

He comes to Washington calmly. But he said in a statement at Cambridge, Mass., last night that "I shall move as rapidly as possible to marshal the best scientific and engineering judgment and creative talent in the United States and to make it available to the President for the formulation of national policy which involves science and technology."

Killian said, too, that "a very strong scientific advisory group is an essential part of the plan, and the recruiting of this group will proceed with the utmost dispatch."

Did Eisenhower's announcement last night on the new set-up for science mean that a "czar" with substantial power is to oversee the missile and earth satellite programs?

At one point in the President's address the language suggested Killian might be such a czar. He said Killian, aided by a strong advisory group of outstanding experts, "will have the active responsibility of helping me follow through on the program." Eisenhower said also that Dr. Killian "will see to it" that projects which experts believe have the best possibilities "shall advance with the utmost speed" and that Killian "will make sure" that the best talent and full resources are applied to high-priority projects.

But then Eisenhower also said: "In the Defense Department is an official, directly responsible to the secretary, in charge of missile development. I have directed that the secretary make certain that the guided missile director is clothed with all the authority that the secretary himself possesses in this field, so that no administrative or interservice block can occur."

Although Eisenhower mentioned no names, it was apparent he was talking of William M. Holaday, special assistant for guided missile matters to Secretary of Defense Neil McElroy.

The President disclosed still another facet to missile management plans. He said he and McElroy had agreed "that any new missile or related program hereafter originated will, whenever practicable be administered without regard to the separate services."

It was learned last week that the Pentagon was exploring the idea of appointing a separate
