Giant 'Gun' To Aid U.S. With ICBM Missile Study

By WILLIAM TERRY

MOFFETT NAVAL AIR STATION, Calif. (UP)—The "fastest gun alive" will be triggered here soon to help the U.S. beat the Russians to the draw for an intercontinental ballistic missile.

Ames Aeronautical Laboratory scientists will use a new 100-foot long, helium-powered gun to study the problem of satellite and ICBM re-entry into the earth's atmosphere.

It will shoot a pint-sized missile, roughly the size of a .45 caliber slug, at a speed of 16,000 miles an hour—a speed approaching that of a nuclear warhead or missile diving through the atmosphere.

By studying this tiny ball through photographs taken along its trajectory of several hundred feet, scientists say they will be able to learn about some of the conditions that could incinerate a manned rocket ship or a bomb-carrying missile.

Temperatures on the surface of the bullet range between 8,000-10,000 degrees.

The gun, being built by the naval gun plant at Pocatello, Idaho, will be installed by the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics at Ames Laboratory sometime this fall to augment an arsenal of high speed guns that can fire smaller projectiles up to 10,000 miles per hour.

The fuel that propels the bullet is helium compressed to high temperatures by explosion of conventional gun powder. The compressed helium drives a piston down the "barrel" of the gun, imparting motion to the tiny missile.

Dr. Alfred J. Eggers, chief of one of Ames' wind tunnel branches, says the gun and its bullets can "give us a lot of valuable information about re-entry heating problems" — right now a key problem in ICBM design.

An intercontinental ballistic missile must be designed to re-enter the earth's atmosphere without burning to a cinder. To shoot an ICBM to a target 5,000 miles away, a missileman would have to sky it to an altitude of about 600 miles, well out of the atmosphere, he said.

In the Ames test lab, the bullet will leave a luminous trail of light as it speeds along at 16,000 miles an hour.

Eggers says it is possible to deduce the amount of heat on the sizzling skin of the missile from the amount of luminescence given off.

KLAMATH COUNTY SUITS
 Thelma H. Morris vs. the city of Klamath Falls, action dismissed without prejudice to either party. The plaintiff sought to collect $9,000 general damages from the city as the result of her fall on a Wantland Avenue sidewalk during 1954. It was the plaintiff's contention that the sidewalk was in a poorly maintained condition with the uneven surface of the walk causing the fall. Donald L. Stroud and Walter D. Cool Jr., attorneys for the city, and Louis J. Taucher, action dismissed.
 The action sought the collection of $12,053 and interest, plus a firm awarded judgment in the amount of $192 and interest.
