Ashland Play Plans Outlined

ASHLAND — Eight additional performances have been scheduled for the four plays to be produced during the 1958 Oregon Shakespearean Festival in Ashland. The season will open with "Much Ado About Nothing" on July 28 and will continue in nightly rotation with "King Lear," "The Merchant of Venice," and "Troilus and Cressida." There will be a total of 39 consecutive performances during the nearly six weeks period.

The long established festival slogan, "Stay Four Days, See Four Plays," will remain in effect. Visitors will still be able to come any four days and see all four of the productions.

The plays will be directed by two well known festival directors, James Sandoe of the University of Colorado and Robert Loper, a director for the department of drama at Stanford University. Both men have long lists of highly successful productions to their credit.

The staging of "Troilus and Cressida," will complete the canon of Shakespeare's plays at Ashland. The Old Vic Theater in London reportedly will complete the canon during the coming season. No more than five English-speaking theater organizations have produced all of Shakespeare's plays. The Oregon Festival will soon possess the only complete library of actual performance recordings of the plays in the world.
