The New "Old" Look

FASHION'S gone full circle, and the '20s are back in style. Once again we have the pointed-toe shoe, the colored hose, and the chemise look with its hard-to-find waistline. To the question, "Where's the waistline?" you can add a new one: "Is it a dress or a coat?" The answer is up to you, for this Spring's lightweight woolen coat and/or dress is whichever your fancy makes it. Look at the hats, too. They have the flavor of the '20s, but they're far more becoming to the wearer.

1. Gathered in back by a half-belt, Fashiontowne's worsted jersey Spring dress-coat has a long lean line and four slimming patch pockets ($60).

2. With or without the self-sash, Nelly de Grab's step-in dress holds its shape. Its richly brocaded cotton knit recalls another era ($25).

3. Worn as dress or coat, this chemise line is Abe Schrader's answer to Spring. Made of lightweight menswear flannel, it buttons to hem ($50).

IN GOOD KING CHARLES' day, bathing was a major project rarely indulged in.

Frequent bathing, in fact, was considered bad for the health. Today, we know that bathing is essential to good health and indispensable to good grooming.

We are all quite human, however, and being human we all perspire. This is nature's wonderful body thermostat. And although perspiration is odorless at first, an unpleasant odor sets in when it comes in contact with bacteria on the skin. The underarm area is a special problem in this regard, so frequent use of soap and water is essential. Often this isn't enough.

Cosmetic chemists have developed many preparations to ward off perspiration odor. How do these "deodorants" or "antiperspirants" differ?

Lovely starlet Valerie Allen knows daintiness is important to charm.

Daintiness

Deodorants employ agents which banish or neutralize odor. Antiperspirants use chemicals which temporarily restrict the flow of perspiration in the area treated. Use of an antiperspirant (to which deodorants usually are added) in so small an area as the armpits is not considered harmful to the skin.

Deodorant powders, colognes, and soaps may be used over the entire body; creams, sticks, and lotions (deodorant and antiperspirant) are for underarm use only.

It's not difficult to distinguish between the two types. The label will tell you, and antiperspirants (which most often have an aluminum compound base) are required to list their active ingredients.

Personal preference will dictate the type you choose, of course, but first you must decide whether you want a deodorant alone or an antiperspirant.

Having made your selection, always follow the instructions on the package.

Here are a few general rules for applying any of these products:

Never apply to skin that is cut or irritated. If you shave under your arms, wait at least 12 hours before applying.

Liquid preparations should be allowed to dry; then the area should be wiped lightly with clear water. When using a cream, blend it in, then wipe away excess.

Just as perspiration can stain clothing, so can these products. The harmful effects are minimized by the addition of buffers to the preparations, but you can prevent permanent damage to a garment by washing or dry-cleaning it before ironing.

To be fresh and clean is the first essential of good grooming. Few of us can afford not to use a deodorant or antiperspirant.
