

WHEN a railroad fire breaks out near the Albany yards of the New York Central system, members of its volunteer fire department don't race to the blaze in fire engines. They take the train. A special three-car fire unit stands by for such emergencies and gets "open track" treatment whenever freight cars catch fire. This rapid service is vital because railroad fires, as destructive as any blaze, have additional hazards: unless quelled quickly they can tie up or destroy whole sections of track, upset railroad schedules, and jeopardize passenger trains.

They Fight Railroad Fires

Fire on the railroad! Two boxcars have burst into flames and been isolated from their train. Fire cars (right) highball to the scene, getting clearance above all other traffic. Property and schedules depend on their action.

No fire hydrants here. Water or chemical is transported in tank cars. Now hoses are hooked up to kind of extinguisher best suited to type of fire.

Firefighters wear asbestos clothing to close in on the crackling blaze.

Firemen are volunteers from the railroad staff. Usually they hold other jobs in freight yard but are on constant fire call.

Why every boy wants to be a fireman: cleaning up requires wrecking car with pikepoles and axes.

This vitamin—the "orange juice" vitamin—is very important. You see, many doctors now believe cold viruses attack you by penetrating weakened walls in tiny blood vessels.

But COLBAN Tablets contain in each daily dose more than the recommended amount of Vitamin C you normally need to strengthen blood vessel walls, thus help fight germs.
