Start a Home- Management File

With one of these handy devices, you don't have to play sleuth every time you're looking for your bankbook.

by Charles H. Coleman

"OH, DEAR," my wife sighed, "I just can't remember where I put that guarantee on your watch."
"But it's got to be here somewhere," I said. "You just gave me the watch for Christmas. It was guaranteed for a year, wasn't it?"

"Yes, I'm sure it was. I thought it was in this drawer. Did you look through that box in the basement?"

That was the way it started. I did some figuring. At the hourly wage I earned at the office, the time my wife and I spent looking for the guarantee cost us about $5. What we needed was a home-management file.

When I mentioned the idea to my wife, it practically floored her. She isn't a business-minded woman.

"But, darling," I explained, "you don't have to be a trained clerk. All we need is a simple file for our papers, something like your file for recipes."

"Are you sure?" she asked with more than a trace of doubt in her voice.

"Of course," I said. "I'll show you just how we'll do it."

I bought a good, sturdy expanding file for 75 cents at the stationery store. It had compartments labeled A, B, C, and on down the line to a final compartment labeled XYZ. This made our task easy.

Under the file letter "A," we put all the operating instructions and spare-parts lists for our "appliances." "B" we use for filing our "bank statements." When I want to check them against our bankbook, they're certainly much easier to find than searching through dresser drawers or boxes in the basement.

"F" serves as the "family" file. Our marriage certificate, birth certificates, baptismal certificates, and newspaper clippings go there. When we need these records for filling out applications, they'll be right at our fingertips. Under "G" we put all our guarantees for everything from watches to our automobile. On a moment's notice I can find the guarantee to anything we own.

We use compartment "H" for "health." Here we file receipts for doctor and dentist bills, health certificates for the children, and records of polio shots and other vaccinations.

The file lettered "I" contains all our insurance policies and receipts for premiums paid. "L" we use for our "legal" file. Here we put our mortgage papers and our wills.

The "school" file under "S" bulges with report cards, records of courses taken, and notes on special activities. Later, the children can refer to these records in applying for jobs. Using "W" for our "work" file, we have a place for our records on Social Security, income-tax deductions, a copy of last year's tax return, notices of union meetings, and letters from personnel offices.

Cleaning out the files about once a year is desirable in order to get rid of out-dated material. As far as the actual filing is concerned, there's nothing to it.

Storing an important paper in a file like ours is just as simple as tossing it in a dresser drawer. And it's certainly a hundred times easier to find when you want it again!
