

The monkeyshines of a well-dressed beachcomber are provided by Manhattan with their cotton Calypso pants in a bold blazer stripe and drift-rope belt ($6.95), and their classically styled Banlon knit sweater-shirt ($10.95).

Revere pairs these new-length white cotton twill shorts with front-flapped pockets ($5.95), and a cotton mesh shirt ($2.95). A junior beach set by Robert Bruce consists of boxer shorts and matching terry-lined cabana coat in a batik-type print ($6.98, set).

Make Way for the Men

by Allyn Rice

FATHER'S DAY, just a few weeks away, is a man-centered day for both grown and little men. Women go to all lengths to please them, and so, it would seem, do pants. No more is there just the short and the long of it, for now there are new middle-lengths, too. "Clam-diggers" calf-length pants and the mid-thigh Tyrolean-like walking shorts are notable examples.

Ever lighter in weight and color (white and natural are leading hues), the trend is away from conservative clothing. Emphasizing comfort and simplicity, this practical wear for sports or leisure is an ideal way to please the man of the house.

It's a winning team. The young batter at the plate is dressed in Rob Roy's pinstripe cotton twill slacks ($2.98) and button-up striped cotton knit pull-over ($1.98). He's intent on making a home run! His manager, giving last-minute instructions, wears Asher's lightweight flannel slacks of Orlon-rayon ($15), and sports Robert Bruce's lambs-wool sweater ($12) atop Enro's shirt of washable rayon linen ($6).
