California Candidates For Senate Speak In Bay City

SAN FRANCISCO — Both candidates for the Republican senatorial nomination are campaigning today in San Francisco.

Gov. Goodwin J. Knight is visiting Fishermen's Wharf and the World Trade Center after a motorcade on Market Street. He is speaking at a luncheon at the Fairmont Hotel sponsored by Jack Goldberger, president of the San Francisco Labor Council.

San Francisco Mayor George Christopher, Knight's principal Republican opponent, is to be given a testimonial dinner tonight at the Sheraton-Palace Hotel.

Atty. Gen. Edmund G. Brown, candidate for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination, told supporters at a $25-a-plate dinner at the Fairmont Hotel last night that "California needs leadership which will face up to our problems."

Brown is opposed on both the Democratic and Republican primary ballots by Sen. William F. Knowland (R-Calif.).

Brown said the state needs 600,000 new jobs to provide for an influx of 2 1/2 million persons in the next four years.

He proposed establishing a state department of economic development, providing special help for small business, appointment of a "public defender of the consumer interest," legislation to assure equal job opportunities, new laws dealing with labor unions, a government reorganization aimed at greater efficiency, action toward alleviating classroom and teacher shortages and getting the state water program started.

Christopher, in a televised talk from Bakersfield, called for "courageous leadership." He opposed what he called Knight's lack of leadership concerning the North-South deadlock concerning the water program and urged construction of the San Luis Reservoir under federal-state financing.
