Learning To Swim Great Stride In Safety For Children In Basin Area

As a part of the Federal Bureau of Reclamation's interest in providing greater safety along irrigation ditches, Mrs. May Myers, water safety chairman of the Klamath Basin Chapter, American Red Cross, urges that parents make a special effort to enroll children in the learn-to-swim programs of the Basin.

Mrs. Myers points out that children and adults alike may receive swimming lessons from instructors trained by the Red Cross at the municipal swimming pool in Klamath Falls, the Malin pool, and the Twin Springs pool in Bonanza. In addition to this the Red Cross has provided an instructor annually for swimming lessons for residents of the Crescent and Odell Lake areas, open to enrollment from people living in Gilchrist, Crescent and Chemult. The Red Cross program stresses water safety and lifesaving methods in its course, together with swimming skills.

The Tulelake Branch of the Red Cross offers free transportation to all children in Newell and the Tulelake area to the Malin pool for the course opening in June.

For parents who are unable to get their children to any of these areas for swimming instruction, or for children too young to be enrolled in classes, a new booklet entitled "Teaching Johnny to Swim" is available at the Red Cross office at nominal cost. This publication is a manual for parents who wish to assist their own children to learn to swim. The booklet includes instruction on getting Johnny ready to learn, practice at home, learning to breathe, and charts illustrating the prone float, prone glide, back float, back glide, kick glide, human stroke, turning over, changing directions, entering the water, and testing. In addition the book includes charts for administering artificial respiration for adults and to children by the new "mouth to mouth" method, and illustrations as to how to help swimmers in trouble. A state patrol car gave chase and a mile later brought the horse to bay. Trooper Luke Madden said that once the spree was over the animal calmly stepped back into harness.

Fire Fighting System Kills 2

SAN DIEGO, Calif. (AP) — Two Navy sailors were asphyxiated Friday night when carbon dioxide from the fire smothering system of the destroyer Cogswell was released into a closed compartment, the Navy said.

Three others were treated for carbon dioxide poisoning at the Navy hospital. A spokesman said they were in satisfactory condition.

The survivors were: Frederick C. Grinnell, 21, an electrician's mate 3c. of Port Angeles, Wash.

La Virne Berry, 21, an interior communication electrician 2c. of Salida, Calif.

Gerald Jan Stark, 18, a fireman of Conroy, Minn.

The Cogswell was berthed alongside the destroyer tender Dixie in San Diego Bay.

Rear Adm. Frank Penno, commander of the Pacific destroyer-cruiser force, said the accident occurred in the emergency diesel generator room, one deck below the main deck.

Fenno said it appeared the five men were accidentally locked in the inner compartment by a slamming door and carbon dioxide was released from the fire smothering system. The carbon dioxide did not escape to other parts of the ship.

Adm. Fenno said the carbon dioxide was apparently released somehow from inside the compartment. It could not have been released from outside, he said.

"The five men had been playing cards in the emergency diesel generator room," Fenno said. "At routine inspection about 7 p.m. they were all right. About half an hour later the accident was discovered."
