Choosing Sides

In restaurants, my wife and I
Peruse the menu slowly;
It isn't that we're epicures,
It isn't that—not solely.

It isn't that we can't decide
Which entree we would savor,
It isn't that we cannot read
The French they seem to favor.

Why study it with furrowed brow?
Why scan the whole thing twice there?
She wants the calories kept down—
I want to keep the price there.
—Dick Emmons

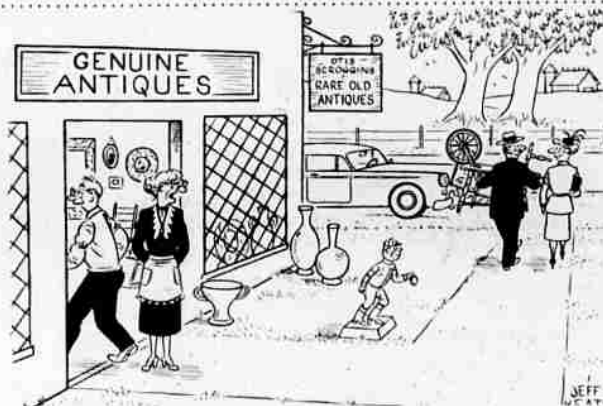

A boy becomes something of a man when he balks if his mother tries to take him to a ladies' washroom.
—Nuggets

Sign in a suburban front yard:
"Anyone in the neighborhood is welcome to use our lawn mower, providing they don't take it out of our front yard."
—Indiana Bell News

During a violent electrical storm, a mother thought her young son would be frightened, so she tiptoed into his room to comfort him. The boy opened his eyes and murmured, "What's Daddy doing with the television set now?"—Lion

"Better order a couple dozen of those rare old antique spinning wheels, Pa . . . there's only 10 left in the stock room."

Two youths were discussing what form of work would provide them the best livelihood when they grew up. "I've always wanted to be a doctor," said one. "I'd like to specialize in some field—obstetrics, maybe." "Obstetrics!" scoffed the other. "At the rate science is going, you'd no sooner get boned up on it when—bang!—somebody would find a cure for it."
—Journal of the American Medical Association

Some of these days we may expect to hear of the absent-minded professor who hurls himself into space—forgetting to take along his rocket ship.—Guy Langley

Electronically Yours

Within her automatic home
The housewife lolls and lingers,
No longer plagued by dishpan hands,
Instead: push-button fingers.
—Powerfax, Elliot Co.

A home builder was anxiously pacing in the waiting room of the maternity ward when the nurse rushed in and exclaimed, "Congratulations! You are the father of triplets!" "Good gosh," said the contractor. "I've exceeded my estimate again!"
—Link-Belt News
