

Communist World Involved In Big Crisis Over Rule

By CHARLES M. McCANN
UPI Foreign News Analyst

The Communist world apparently is involved in its biggest crisis since the Polish and Hungarian revolts of 1956.

The cause of the crisis, it is indicated, is that the Soviet Russian and Chinese Communist regimes have reason to be alarmed over the situation both in their countries and in the Soviet satellite states.

One indication of the crisis is the execution of former Premier Imre Nagy and Gen. Pal Malater, leaders of the Hungarian revolt.

Another is the current savage attack by the Russian and Chinese Communists on President Tito of Yugoslavia because of his determination to maintain his independence.

That these two developments are linked is made evident by the indirect allegation that Tito permitted Nagy to continue plotting against "The Hungarian People's Republic" while he was a refugee in the Yugoslav embassy in Budapest after Russia's Red army intervened to crush the revolt.

The most plausible explanation of the executions and the new attack on Tito is that they are due to the state of affairs in the Communist-ruled countries.

Just what this state of affairs may be remains a mystery.

It has been reported that both Soviet Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev and Chinese Communist leader Mao Tse-Tung are under attack by the "Stalinists" in their parties, the men who favor a harsh dictatorship.

Both Russia and China are facing difficult economic situations. Part of the Russian situation is Khrushchev's agricultural and industrial program.

But the party dissensions and the economic situations are not alone sufficient to explain the present developments.

It may well be that the attack on Tito and the executions are due to political conditions in the Communist-ruled countries.

"There is no doubt that there is a surge of dissatisfaction not only among the people at large but in the Communist parties themselves.

That is due primarily to Khrushchev's disastrous action in repudiating the policies of Stalin, and in promising the Russian people a new deal, and Mao's action in following his example.

This dissatisfaction extends to all of the Soviet satellite countries.

In ordering the executions, Khrushchev must have allowed for the shocked reaction to them from countries all over the free world, including "neutralist" India.

He must have foreseen that the brutal action, a reversion to the worst type of Stalinist terrorism, might profoundly prejudice his chance of getting President Eisenhower and other allied leaders into a "summit" meeting.

Whatever lies behind the executions and the attack on Tito there is every indication that there is a real crisis.

RESIGNS

YREKA — Lester Newton, probation officer for Siskiyou County since March 1, 1946, has resigned to become principal of the Gazelle Elementary School. A successor to Newton will be chosen by Superior Court Judge James Allen from the top three applicants recommended by the Siskiyou County Probation Committee. Judge Allen has asked the county division of field services of the youth authority to assist the probation committee in fielding the applicants, according to Newton.

Ike Following Precedent Of Truman In His Defense Of Adams On Gift Charges

By LYLE C. WILSON
United Press International

WASHINGTON, (UPI) — President Eisenhower seems now to be following the precedent of President Truman, each having had a close White House associate who came under severe attack by congressional investigators.

Harry S. Truman's associate was World War I buddy, Harry H. Vaughan, a major general by 1949 and military aide to the President. When Vaughan's name became associated with so-called influence peddlers and five per centers, a Democratic-controlled Senate moved to investigate. It was rumored then that Vaughan would refuse to testify; that he would reject a subpoena, and that he would be supported in that action by his great friend, Truman.

Truman squelched those rumors well before the Senate investigation began. Later, he appealed to the press "in common fairness" to suspend judgement on Vaughan until the general had a chance to tell his story to the Senate investigators.

When asked in his news conferences before Vaughan testified to comment on his aide's alleged actions, Truman simply replied that he was not aware that his associate had done the things charged. When it was all over and Vaughan had been shown to have extended and received some remarkable favors, Truman was asked if he intended to fire his military aide. His answer was: "I do not."

Vaughan's willingness to appear before congressional investigators and Truman's desire that he do so now have been precisely matched by President Eisenhower and presidential assistant Sherman Adams. The fact seems to be that there was no other choice. Anyway, no other feasible and satisfactory choice.

Last weekend's sunburst of bad publicity for Adams and the Eisenhower administration persuaded most interested parties that Adams would have to talk. It was obvious that he would have to talk before one of three forums, all difficult and two potentially hostile. Adams could do his stuff on TV, before a news conference of 100 or more reporters or before the House subcommittee which turned up favors received from his friend, Bernard Goldfine.

investigators was chosen as the most effective and, perhaps, also because subcommittee have established rules of procedure and a chairman to whom appeal may be made in extremity. The committee also had official status and it had been the vehicle for the original charges against Adams.

Such an appearance before congressional investigators is not with any guarantee that the witness' troubles will ease away. The Senate subcommittee which investigated Vaughan made a report reprimanding him for association with "an outright fixer" and for accepting deep freezes for himself and friends. President Truman was unconvinced, however, or, anyway, he was content. Vaughan stayed on.

The Republicans made a lot of votes from that with their phrase "that mess in Washington."
