New Missile With Split Personality Could Drive Red Defense Setup Crazy

By DOUGLAS LARSEN
NEA Staff Correspondent

H O L L O M A N A I R F O R C E BASE, N. M. (NEA) — A new U.S. guided missile with a split personality is going to drive the Russians crazy.

Called the Mace, it has just been unveiled at this huge Air Force air research installation.

It has two interchangeable electronic brains, can carry hydrogen and atom bombs, flies over 600 miles per hour to targets 1,000 miles away and has been developed by the Martin Co. of Baltimore, Md.

The Mace's unique feature, the ability to fly with one of two guidance systems depending on the mission, forces the Russians to establish an enormously expensive defense system against it. In effect one missile with an alternate brain means that an enemy must double its anti-missile effort to combat this type of weapon.

This concept, plus other sophisticated refinements of the missile are going to be incorporated in the Mace, add new importance to developments in the non-ballistic missile field. For the past year most interest has centered on ballistic missiles which have trajectories like a mortar shell and can fly through airless space because they carry their own oxygen element in the fuel system.

Missiles like the Mace, called air-breathers because they use conventional jet engines and need oxygen from the atmosphere, have tended to be regarded as obsolete. But such things as giving them twin brains and making them recoverable after firing—the Mace can be lowered to the ground safely by parachute—add new significance to the air-breathers.

The Mace, as scheduled in Air Force plans, will have a vital front-line role for the next 10 years at least.

Automatic tracking and navigation — called ATRAN — is the newest of the Mace's two guidance systems, developed by the Goodyear Aircraft Corp.

A film strip which is a map of the route over which the missile will fly is placed in the system before firing. Then, as the missile begins its flight, a radar in the ATRAN system which scans the ground is synchronized with the film map to keep the bird on its deadly course. It is almost impossible for an enemy to jam or confuse the system.

ATLAN permits the Mace to fly at extremely low altitudes during all kinds of weather, putting an almost impossible burden on enemy radar. To make a solid radar fence against the Mace is almost prohibitively expensive.

A fast, very low altitude approach makes shooting down the Mace an extremely difficult operation. ATRAN is used mostly when a low-level mission is required.

When a high altitude mission is called for, the Mace uses an inertial guidance system manufactured by the AC Spark Plug Division of General Motors. It's the same guidance system used in most ballistic missiles.

Details of the Mace's trip are fed into an electronic memory device. As the missile heads to its target an instrument which keeps constant track of its progress is synchronized with the memory system. The system automatically corrects for wind or any other variable encountered during the missile's flight.

Because there are absolutely no electronic emissions from this system during its flight, it is jam-proof. The inertial system can make both high and low altitude missions, but is most suited to high flights, including those at over 40,000 feet.

Fixed targets far behind the front lines have been assigned to Mace missile crews. Such targets include rail terminals, ammunition storage areas and troop concentrations. The job of the Mace, as it was the job of the fighter-bomber, is to prevent supplies and troops from reaching the front.

The Mace will replace the Matar missile, also developed by Martin. Mace missile crews are now being trained and will be sent to Europe and the Far East. The system is completely mobile and designed to be operated from even the most rugged terrain.

The missile is 44 feet long and has a 23-foot wing span. It uses conventional fuel and is easy to maintain and operate under field conditions. The Mace costs roughly $100,000 apiece, which is relatively cheap compared to other missile systems. The fact that it can be recovered when fired for training also brings down the cost of the Mace.

KLAMATH FALLS ASSEMBLY 57, Order of Rainbow for Girls, sent this delegation to the Oregon Grand Assembly held recently at Albany. During the assembly, Mrs. Roy A. Rightmire, at far left, mother adviser of the local assembly, was elected a member of the Grand Executive Committee for the state, the first time such an honor has fallen to a local resident. Member Sandra Stone was also elected grand representative from this state to the Oklahoma Grand Assembly, parent body of the Rainbow Girls, with which she will conduct state correspondence. Girls attending were, left to right, in front, seated, Worthy Adviser Donna Carter and Gayle Osborn; standing, Kay Detroit, Sandra Stone, Betty Kring, Myrtle Harrison, Shirley Leppert, Janet Philipps, Linda Hall, Bonnie Lake, Kay Fenning and Mary Ott; and, in bus, Kayleen Johnson, Karon Goen and Opal Morgan.

Centenarian Honored In Madera On His Birthday

By RONALD WAGONER

MADERA, Calif. (UPI)—A lively centenarian who doesn't think his victory over father time "is much to brag about" was honored here today on his 100th birthday.

"I'm not old," said George Nelson Mickel. "I've just been around longer than most people. Really, it isn't much to brag about."

Mickel will be honored at a birthday party at the Madera Methodist Church where he was a regular attendant for years until he fell and broke a hip four years ago. Now he must depend on a wheelchair.

Mrs. and Mrs. Leslie Webster, who care for Mickel in his small and comfortable home here, say that Mickel has been looking forward to the party for days. Invitations were sent to 200 friends and relatives.

Mickel said he had no particular formula for reaching the century mark. He does point out, however, that he lived a clean life.

"I just never got started drinking alcoholic beverages and I never smoked in my life," Mickel said. "Perhaps that had something to do with it."

Mickel depends on Mr. and Mrs. Webster and two small Chihuahua dogs for company. He also watches television almost every day. The tiny dogs, according to Mickel, "make fine watch dogs."

Mickel's favorite programs now are big league baseball games. "I used to be a Braves and Cardinals fan," he said. Since the Giants and Dodgers moved out here to California, I root for them."

All during his life, Mickel would have very little truck with the "horseless carriage" which was invented as he approached middle age. He refused to learn how to drive an automobile and friends or relatives drove him whenever he traveled.

Mickel's hearing is good and he uses glasses when he reads his papers and magazines. His appetite is fine and he eats plenty of vegetables.

He recalls that he was born into a large family in Minnesota and that his father was a cobbler who fought for the Union in the Civil War.

The family moved to Kansas when George was 12 years old and he married Eleanor Maria Barnes in 1897. Mrs. Mickel died seven years ago at the age of 86.

Mickel came to California in 1890, first settling in Ventura where William Henry Barnes, his father-in-law, had established a law practice. The family moved to Madera in 1912. Mickel held several jobs in the county courthouse including tax assessor. He retired at the age of 65.

Three of Mickel's five children survive. They are Mrs. Georgette Cook, society editor of the Modesto Bee, Laurence Mickel, a retired Army colonel of San Marino, and William Mickel, a maritime engineer of Fresno. A nephew is L.B. Mickel, New York City, who recently retired as superintendent of bureaus for United Press International.

Mickel has seven grandchildren and nine great-grandchildren.

Gov. Knight yesterday commuted the 31-year-old Jefferson's sentence to life without possibility of parole.

Jefferson, convicted under a state law requiring the death penalty for convicts who commit assault with a deadly weapon, was to be executed last Friday, but was saved by a 30-day stay of execution.

Knight said at that time he planned to commute the sentence. Jefferson was serving a 5-year to life term at Folsom for second degree murder in 1955 when he and another inmate knifed a fellow prisoner.

Licenses Suspended

Wallace Beal, 34, Chiloquin, license suspended for one year as of June 16, for driving while driving privileges were under suspension.

Marvin Thompson, 35, Beatty, license suspended for three years as of June 5, for driving while under the influence of intoxicating liquor while driving privileges were under suspension.

Theodore Orville Moore, 50, Chiloquin, license suspended for 90 days as of June 16, for driving while under the influence of intoxicating liquor.

Truitt Weathersby, Malin, license suspended for 90 days as of June 18, for driving while under the influence of intoxicating liquor.

Roy Lee Choat, 29, 429 Roosevelt Street, license suspended as of June 6, for failure to show proof of financial responsibility.

Jessie Winona Cramblet, 45, 322 North Sixth Street, license suspended as of May 21, for failure to show proof of financial responsibility.

Vera Maxine May, 29, 2040 South Sixth Street, Box 684, license suspended as of June 6, for failure to show proof of financial responsibility.

Mack Molett, 42, 1208 Adams Street, license suspended as of June 3, for failure to show proof of financial responsibility.

San Quentin convict Clifford Jefferson of Kern County will serve his life in prison instead of being executed.

Legion Report Seeks Revise

SACRAMENTO (AP)—A committee report today called for streamlining the American Legion's veterans rehabilitation program in California without curtailing services.

Laughlin E. Waters, chairman of the California department's study committee on rehabilitation practices, told conventioning Legionnaires that the program is processing 32,000 claims for California veterans each year.

Quoting a report by a financial consulting firm, he recommended administrative changes, cutting publication of the "California Legionnaire" newspaper to bi-monthly instead of monthly, and devoting more effort to publicity and fund raising.

Alfred P. Chamie, the department commander, said the California Legion started the year with a deficit of $18,000, but it will be trimmed to $16,000 by the end of the year.

State Treasurer A. Ronald Butten joined other public officials in urging Legionnaires to back Prop. 1, the 300 million dollar bond issue to continue state veterans farm and home loans.

"It's not only that the program is self-liquidating and so provides benefit without cost. I'm for it because this is the only substantial assistance California gives to ex-servicemen."

U.S.-Mexico Relations Good

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The United States may be under fire elsewhere in Latin America, but the head of Mexico's consular service says relations between this nation and her big northern neighbor were never better.

The director general of the consular service, Dr. Rafael Nieto, spoke yesterday at a meeting of U.S. consuls in Mexico are holding here with State Department officials from Washington.

Nieto said Mexico and the United States are working together closer than ever before and collaboration is at an all-time peak.

Officer Admits $27,000 Theft

NEW YORK (UPI)—An honor patrolman admitted Thursday night that he systematically looted two police property safes of almost $27,000, thus ending one of the most embarrassing mysteries in New York Police Department annals.

Patrolman Jean H. Jackson, 35, a Negro, admitted the thefts shortly before midnight after 10 hours of intensive questioning by some of the department's top brass. He was charged with grand larceny.

Jackson, who won a commendation in 1955 for disarming and arresting four robbers, told his questioners he spent almost $1,000 of the pilfered funds on redecorating his Harlem apartment, where he lived alone. Some of the money went for several $150 suits and several pair of $28 shoes, he was quoted.

Authorities hinted that Jackson, a member of the force since June 1953, also spent a considerable amount on an unidentified girl friend. Married and the father of two children, he has been estranged from his wife the last 10 years, authorities said.

After confessing, Jackson led investigators to a friend's apartment and a metal box containing $13,443, representing approximately half of the stolen funds. Jackson insisted, however, that neither the friend nor anyone else knew what the box contained.

The will instructed Mrs. McCall's executor to "Please see that no one has the part I've said if they smoke. I hate it."

She left a corner cupboard and all its contents to one female relative, but with this stipulation: "If she smokes cigarettes I do not want her to have anything. I abhor women smoking and I do not want them to have my things when I am gone."
