Atom Secrets Bill Approved

WASHINGTON (AP)—Only final Senate approval is needed to complete congressional action on President Eisenhower's proposal to share atomic weapons information and material with U. S. allies.

The House voted Friday to accept a compromise of relatively minor differences between Senate and House versions of the measure. The Senate is expected to act the first of next week.

The chief provision of the bill would apply only to Britain. This provision would permit exchange of nuclear weapon making information and material and non-nuclear parts of atomic weapons only with allies that have reached an advanced stage in weapons production capability.

Other allies could qualify later if they achieved an advanced stage on their own.

Other provisions of the bill would permit the less further advanced allies to: 1. Receive information about characteristics of atomic weapons to facilitate their training and readiness to participate in a possible nuclear conflict.

2. Receive certain non-nuclear parts of composite weapons such as missiles, and nuclear devices of military significance such as submarine propulsion reactors.

All exchanges under the bill would be subject to congressional veto.

Board Continues Valuation Study

The County Board of Equalization is continuing a study of possible revisions to assessed valuations placed on downtown properties by Assessor Clyde Caldwell.

County Judge Charles H. Mack advised Friday the board has until July 11 to decide on whether to lower, hike or leave Caldwell's assessments the same.

Under study is a survey made by the State Tax Commission on downtown property, including that on Main, South Sixth and other streets.

The survey reportedly reflects current market values on these properties—the values from which assessed values are determined. The latter values dictate how much property taxes an owner will pay.

The equalization board's authority supersedes that of the assessor.

The court referred the bid to the county engineer. It expects to award the sale to Dugan and Mest next week.

Commission Seeks Timber Tax Equity

Major problems of equalization of timber tax values facing the various counties of Oregon will be publicly aired by the State Tax Commission in a series of special fact-finding hearings starting July 7, according to S. W. Horn, tax commission chairman.

Horn said that several county boards of equalization have reported divergent actions in treatment of timber taxation, and that the special hearings, which will be held at the Capitol Building in Salem, are necessary for the Tax Commission to fulfill its responsibilities as a State Board of Equalization.

Oregon property tax laws require equalization between classes of property within a county, as well as between counties.

The different treatment of timber by the several counties, especially those that have recently completed a reappraisal program, indicates a lack of uniformity that the Tax Commission felt should be thoroughly explored.
