Break the Ice Jane McHenry

In snow, sand, or earth draw large numbers from one to six or whatever number of children are playing—minus one. The person who is IT does not have a number, but the others stand behind a number ready to play. IT faces them, standing eight feet away. He calls any two numbers—3 and 5 or 6 and 2—and the players behind these numbers change places, calling out their names as they do. IT tries to steal one of their places as they do this, and if he succeeds, he takes over that number and the loser is IT. Every so often IT yells, "Introductions!" There is a mad scramble as everyone trades places, shouting their names. This game is fun to help new members get acquainted with a group.
