BOSS MAN at the Lava Beds National Monument is Superintendent I. D. Kerr who keeps the big area running smoothly the year round for the benefit of tourists.

Forest Fire Cost To State Big Annual Item

DALLAS (Special)—Every forest fire takes a bite of Oregon's biggest resource.
Sam Robb of Willamette Valley Lumber Company, Dallas, chairman of the Oregon Committee of American Forest Products Industries, said today that forest fires which sap the state's economic wealth ultimately hit every Oregonian in the pocketbook.
Oregon forest industries employ some 47,000 full-time workers and produce goods worth one billion dollars annually, he said. They depend on the Beaver State's green and growing forest empire for raw materials.
Forests of the state are also an important part of the scenic attractions that draw thousands of tourists to the state each year and provide recreation for additional thousands of sportsmen, he added.
Robb called on Oregonians to protect their stake in the forests by crushing out cigarettes thoroughly, using the car ashtray and making sure campfires are out before leaving them.
He urged support for the fire-prevention programs of the Keep Oregon Green Association.
