Buried Axe Ruins Mill

Things were humming smoothly at the Paul B. Hult Lumber Company near Dillard one day recently when the band saw suddenly hit something on its first cut through a three-foot log. The impact ruined the band, tore up part of the mill's headrig, caused considerable confusion and made a whale of a noise.

Digging under the bark of the log, women discovered a single-bitted axhead, buried in the wood. Some early day timber feller had apparently quit in the middle of his job.
