Washington Frets Over Prospects Of Wild Buying

By ELMER C. WALZER
UPI Financial Editor

NEW YORK, (UPI)—Just about the time that Wall Street talk is veering away from inflation to deflation, word comes that Washington, D.C., is getting worried about the prospects of a wild buying spree.

It seems that the public servants who are going to get a 10 per cent wage increase are spending their money like mad even before they get it.

This spending, it is said, has led officialdom to turn on a few worry whirls and begin to think of how to hold such hilarity with money in check.

STANDBY CONTROLS

Prentice-Hall in its current "What's Happening in Washington," says "President Eisenhower has just about decided to ask Congress for standby consumer credit controls before it winds up the current session."

Such decision, says P-H, would reflect both the administration's confidence that the business recession is on the way out and administration fear that the return of prosperity "will bring a buying spree on the installment plan that will increase inflationary pressures."

Prentice-Hall holds that the situation in Washington appears to justify White House concern, what with government employes spending so wildly.

Treasury Secretary Anderson is said to be the chief proponent of standby credit controls.

Congress is said to be not too cordial to the plan, although Prentice-Hall thinks it could pass if presented.

The President is said to be opposed at this time to controls on prices and wages which administration economists are said to have included in a measure drawn up for administration perusal.

Neither the President nor Secretary Anderson believes home buying should be included in the proposal, P-H says.

Secretary Anderson's theory is that curbs on consumer credit—installment buying—should be tried first.

If this brake is not sufficient, it seems that the President then will go to Congress reluctantly for controls on prices and wages.

PRO AND CON

The idea is that standby control measures even if not used would be a healthy deterrent to a wild installment buying spree.

Those who oppose controls say they never work very well in war time, and they wouldn't stand half a chance in peacetime.

We had consumer credit controls less than eight years ago. Regulation became effective Sept. 18, 1950. This regulation laid down rules on installment buying, specifying down payments and amounts and intervals of installments. We also had credit regulation in 1948.

Opponents of those regulations shouted loudly against them as being discriminatory not only to wage earners but also to farmers. And these opponents said regulation never did much, if anything, to curb inflation.

The regulation was described as controlling four-tenths of one per cent of total consumer purchasing power.

Right now, business men say they'd like to see some of that so-called crazy spending that's going on among government employes in Washington.

Automobile dealers would welcome it. And so would the auto union which finds it can't even use its strike weapon in a depressed auto industry.

'Fosdic' To Aid In Census

WASHINGTON (AP)—An elaborate electronic device named "Fosdic" is going to play a big role in the 1960 census.

It won't make the actual nose counts. But the U. S. Census Bureau is counting on it to speed up the job of analyzing census information—cutting the time from months to weeks.

It also is expected to save millions of dollars by doing the work which required 2,000 or more punch card operators for the 1950 census.

Like many other electronic gadgets, Fosdic got its name from function—in this case "Film Optical Sensing Device for Input to Computers."

It is designed to scan raw material collected by census workers in the field and translate it onto a magnetic tape that can be fed into big electronic computing machines for analysis.

These, in turn, will come up with the answers to such questions as the nation's growth and the states where it is concentrated—all in far less time than it took the last census 10 years ago.

PRONTO SNAFU

EDMONTON, Alta. (AP)—Civil defense officials were demonstrating how fast a new mobile communications unit could go to work in an emergency. They called the show "Exercise Pronto." They turned the unit on. The power failed. Undaunted, they switched to the emergency gasoline-powered generator. Somebody forgot to fill the gas tank.
