

New Fall Fashions Show Plenty Of Girl's Topside

By GAY PAULEY
 NEW YORK (UPI)—Plenty of the new fall clothes for dress-up show plenty of a girl's topside. Luis Estevez and Cecil Chapman, a couple of designers who believe shape is for showing, cut necklines to new depths both fore and aft in their collections displayed this week for 200 visiting fashion reporters.

"Modest? Well, just barely," quipped a spokesman for Miss Chapman, who coops some necks right down to where that high-rising empire waistline comes to.

The Cuban-born Estevez adds two new treatments to the roster of devastating necklines for which he is famous. One is the U-back, which bares almost the whole spine, in a deep U-shape. He also introduces the Cleopatra neckline, which consists of a separate wide flat collar encircling the throat, with a strapless very low cut dress below.

Another Estevez number in transparent brown chiffon over crepe plunges in a deep-V to the waist both front and back. The outer layer of chiffon comes to a modest high in front.

Miss Chapman features three major silhouettes for cocktail and evening clothes. One is the masked sheath—actually a sheath dress with a wide panel running all the way from the low-cut neckline at the back to the hemline.

The second is the diamond horseshoe, which clings to the body to the knees, then widens into a flounce or in some cases ends at the hemline with a wide border of one of the long-hair furs. A cream white brocade, for instance, is bordered with white fox.

Third is the dancing nymph silhouette, with a fitted, draped front but with the back ballooning out like a parachute.

Estevez also uses contrasting fabric to call attention to the bosom. Several of his short, fitted cocktail sheaths have the bust encircled by a wide band of white or bright colored satin, with the ends twisted into an upstanding "propeller bow" at the front.

For daytime, Estevez likes the higher waistline, often accenting it with a drawstring tied under the bosom. He also brings out the pinwheel sheath, cut straight and narrow except for a wide-pleated flounce at the knee.
