TULELAKE GARDEN CLUB

By Mrs. Frank Manceau

Tulelake Garden Club members meeting July 15 for the club's annual picnic at the home of Mrs. Chester J. Stonecypher Sr., made plans to enter a booth at the Tulelake-Butte Valley Fair in September and for the district garden club rummage sale.

Potluck luncheon was served in the charming patio at the Stonecypher with Mrs. Elmer Scott, Mrs. H. T. Street and Mrs. Stonecypher as hostesses. Nineteen members and guests were present.

The booth will be assembled and manned by volunteers of the club. Members are asked to leave rummage at the home of Mrs. Bill Hooper or the Union Oil Station in Tulelake. Money from the sale is to be used to pay for good programs for the district meeting.

Members came dressed in garden clothes, competing for a prize which was won by Mrs. Tom Kadous, dressed in shorts and brief top, armed with a flit gun and tree branch bearing garden pests.

No meeting is held during August. The next meeting will be September 16 at the home of Mrs. Bill McClymonds.

BONANZA-LANGELL VALLEY GARDEN CLUB

Mrs. Crystel Cheyne, member of the Mt. Laki Garden Club spoke on plant propagation at the last meeting of the Bonanza-Langell Valley Garden Club at the home of Mrs. Elizabeth Bell. A report on the recent district board meeting was heard; plans were made for collecting rummage to help finance interesting programs for district garden club meetings and there was discussion of a suggestion to shorten the name of the club.

Date of the fall flower show has been changed to August 22 to avoid conflict with other flower shows. The regular meeting sched-

Oregon Farmer Said Busy Cleaning War Orphanage

SEOUL (AP)—In a quiet green valley at the northwestern edge of this city stands a new home for orphans with modern facilities hard to find in other orphanages.

Busy giving it the finishing touch is Harry Holt, a 53-year-old farmer from Creswell, Ore., who in 2½ years has single-handedly arranged adoption by U.S. families of 902 mixed blood children from Korea.

Another large group of children—70 to 80—is expected to fly Wednesday with him to their new homes in the United States.

"I wanted to make this home as cheerful as possible for the children, who will be away from home when they leave their mothers," Holt said.

The orphanage will serve as a temporary home for up to 200 children—Mostly fathered by American soldiers while they wait for completion of immigration processes here.

Holt expects that he will have spent some $40,000 for the new home when it is completed some time in October. He said children will move soon into the already finished main building. The construction began early last month.

The home standing on a two-acre lot consists of five buildings: The main building where the children will live, a hospital and clinic, a warehouse and laundry house, a dormitory for girl attendants, and a doctor's house.

The buildings will have hot and cold running water, power around the clock, and central heating.

Children are now housed in a rented building in downtown Seoul. It often gets overcrowded. The new home is about four times the size of the old one.

Asked to pose for a picture in front of the light grey buildings, Holt said with a twinkle beneath his thick dusty eyebrows: "I am the dirtiest looking man around."

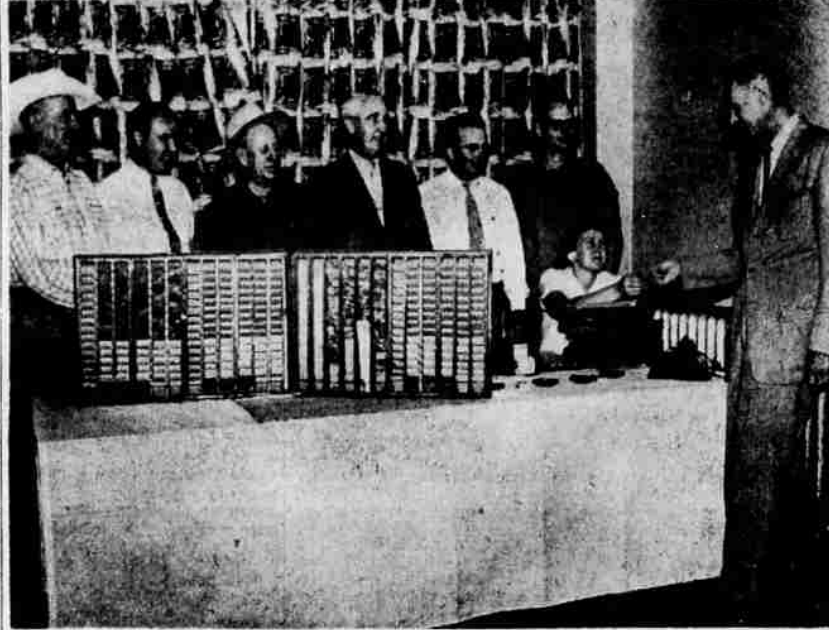

He did not bother to wipe sweat and dust off his face or tidy his greying hair. He moves about busily among a group of Korean construction workers every day from dawn to sunset, looking exactly the opposite of the common Korean concept of a rich, smartly dressed American.

The ruddy-faced farmer wearing a faded pink sports shirt, khaki trousers and "two-year-old" shoes draws approving friendly smiles from passengers when he rides downtown in a rickety Korean bus.

When he leaves here for home, he will do so with dual pleasure. While taking another large group of youngsters to happy new homes, he will also be headed for a ceremony in Eugene, Ore., July 28 where eight children he adopted from Korea nearly three years ago will become U.S. citizens.

The children, four boys and four girls, three to six in age, live with the Holts who have six children of their own.
