Park Service Rejects Bids

CRATER LAKE—Word has been received from the National Parks Service, Washington, D.C., that all bids received on June 24 for construction of apartment buildings, comfort stations, a covered entranceway and park entrance stations have been rejected.

Bids are being invited on three separate items from the original plans and specifications and will be opened at 2 p.m. on August 5 at the park superintendent's office, 307 Federal Building, Medford.

Plans and specifications are available without deposit from that office.

The three items are the 1,000 square foot covered entranceway to the administration building at park headquarters, two comfort stations at Mazama Campgrounds, 360 square feet each, and a new entrance station at Annie Spring.

Information has been set to all of the planholders, some 29 in number, who took out plans and specifications to bid on the original contract. Permission was granted by the regional office in San Francisco to let three separate bids because some of the expansion, such as additional camp sites at Mazama, is being held up until these contracts can be let.

Kingsley Field Funds Chopped

Action by the House Appropriations Committee on Tuesday approved funds for a new heating plant at Kingsley Field, but lopped out funds for building a commissary at the local base.

The total figure of $435,000 approved for military construction projects in Oregon included $76,000 for the construction of a new heating plant at Kingsley Field.

However, the committee lopped $153,000 from the bill which would have been used to build a commissary at the base. The committee pointed out that in their opinion nearby civilian facilities can do the job of the commissary.

Other Oregon projects approved in the bill included $233,000 for construction of new Air National Guard facilities at Portland, and $126,600 for a new National Guard armory at Oswego.
