Fate Of Jordan's King Termed Vital

By TOM A. CULLEN
NEA Staff Correspondent
LONDON (NEA)—A boy king on the shaky throne of a poor nation that has no geographical reason for existence. This is the uneasy pivot on which balances the future of Western influence in the Middle East.

The king is 22-year-old Hussein, the nation, Jordan.
Should Hussein lose control of his landlocked desert realm, the last of the purely Arab nations would be lost to the West, and Israel would be virtually surrounded by the forces of Egypt's Gamal Abdel Nasser.

Both the West and Nasser appreciate Hussein's keystone role. British troops, at the king's request, flew into Jordan to help stabilize the situation.
Nasser reportedly has been behind the three assassination plots against the king uncovered within the past year.

Having weathered the conspiracies, Hussein is credited with a survival value that can be a major asset in the land of the long knife. His cousin, Faisal of Iraq, was not so lucky.
The two young kings came to their thrones because their grandfathers (who were brothers) had served Britain well in leading revolts against the Turks during World War I.

Hussein came to the throne under tragic circumstances. In 1951, King Abdullah was murdered as he was entering a mosque in Jerusalem. His grandson, then 15, was at his side and a bullet ripped his tunic. The boy was the only member of the entourage who didn't throw himself to the ground. Hussein's father, Talal became king.

Hussein went off to Britain and went a year at exclusive Harrow School whose alumni include Sir Winston Churchill and Jawaharlal

Nehru. He is remembered there as a dashing prince who loved fast motor cars and Shakespeare. But to Hussein, Harrow spelled hardship.
"I had to clean out my room every day, make my bed, clean my shoes and press my clothes," he once ruefully recalled.
At the end of a year, Talal was removed from the throne because of a mental breakdown. Hussein stayed in England to take a special six-months course at Sandhurst, the Royal Military Academy.

In April, 1953, he came home to take over this throne. But the nation over which he ruled had changed radically since Britain arbitrarily had carved it out of the desert wastes. The original population of 400,000 had been tripled almost overnight in 1948 by an influx of nearly a million Arab refugees from Palestine who fled the creation of the state of Israel.

The original population had been mostly peasants and Bedouin tribesmen, but the refugees included townsmen who were among the best educated and most politically articulate in the Middle East. Many of them still live in camps, subsisting on charity, and growing increasingly bitter with their frustrating plight, whom they hold responsible for Hussein thus inheriting an explosive situation. At 17, however, he was content to let his British advisers, chiefly Lt. Gen. John Glubb, commander of the Arab Legion, worry about it. He took himself a queen, Egyptian-born, English-educated Dina Abdel Hamid. She bore him a daughter, but he himself, reportedly because of his taste for fast cars, planes, parties—and women.

Soon Hussein was sucked into the vortex of Arab nationalist politics—and was forced into growing up.
In 1956, under nationalist, pro-Nasser pressure, Hussein dismissed Glubb and broke his financial and other military ties with Britain. Jordan then became financially dependent upon Saudi Arabia, Egypt and Syria.
The nationalists, however, were not satisfied and aimed at deposing Hussein himself. Last year, when he saw his throne threatened, Hussein took resolute action. He purged the army of leftist officers and dissolved parliament.
The U.S. stepped in with financial and moral support and Hussein once again moved into the small camp of friends of the West in the Arab world. Then he and Faisal allied their kingdoms in a federation to counter the formation of the Egyptian-Syrian United Arab Republic.

Today, Hussein has most of the army on his side together with the Bedouin tribesmen and most of the peasantry. He also has the blessings of the U.S. and Britain. Against him are most of the urban population, the intellectuals, the Palestinians—and Nasser.

KERNERSVILLE, N.C. (UPI)—The car swerved wildly, left the highway, ripped through a fence and bumped along for 250 feet into former Raymond Wilson's pasture.
Car owner Franklin B. James was unhurt, as was another man who was driving from Kernersville.
But Patrolman Clay Fox said that when he came on the scene James had a nasal fracture.
Seems the car-owner and the farmer had argued about who was to pay for the fence, and the farmer had punched James in the nose.

Mom Daughter, Back From Tour
McCLOUD—Mrs. Marie Vandermarck of McCloud and Mrs. Lucille Cameron, her daughter, of Marysville, have recently returned from a trip to France and other countries in Europe by air over the new polar route.
Dusk on one side of the polar region and bright sunshine on the other was a unique sight for the couple.
Mrs. Vandermarck and Mrs. Cameron traveled through France to Isle sur Sorbie, Van Cluse, France, where they visited Mrs. Vandermarck's mother, Mrs. Lucille Girard, 89, whom she had not seen for 38 years.
The two women joined a pilgrimage of 140 people, among whom there were two other Americans, for a six-day tour through Italy, Turkey, Finland, Denmark, Germany, Holland, Switzerland, The Netherlands, England, Czechoslovakia and Arras.
